

COLLEGE · LATIN · SERIES

Elmer's
Captivi of Plautus

L. Lovasik
C. Jansky

G. M. ELLIOTT LIBRARY
CINCINNATI BIBLE SEMINARY
2700 GLENWAY AVE.
P. O. BOX 043200
CINCINNATI, OHIO 45204-3200

ALLYN AND BACON'S COLLEGE LATIN SERIES

UNDER THE GENERAL EDITORSHIP OF

CHARLES E. BENNETT AND JOHN C. ROLFE

---

T. MACCI PLAVTI
CAPTIVI

WITH INTRODUCTION AND NOTES

BY

HERBERT C. ELMER

CORNELL UNIVERSITY

GEORGE MARK ELLIOTT LIBRARY

The Cincinnati Bible Seminary

ALLYN AND BACON

Boston

New York

Chicago

878.
P721 t

COPYRIGHT, 1900, BY HERBERT C. ELMER.

TDR

Norwood Press
J. S. Cushing & Co. — Berwick & Smith
Norwood Mass. U.S.A.

PREFACE.

THE text of the present edition of the Captivi may by some, perhaps, be considered ultra-conservative. I still hold, and more firmly than ever, the view expressed in my edition of the Phormio of Terence, that the testimony of the manuscripts is invariably entitled to more consideration than arbitrary "corrections." Again and again has it been demonstrated that manuscript readings, which to our imperfect vision seemed impossible, represent after all what was originally written in ancient texts. Even while the present volume is in preparation, there appears in the Rheinisches Museum an article by Birt, wherein he makes it seem probable that scores of manuscript readings in Plautus which editors have considered certainly corrupt, and which most of them have taken it upon themselves to "emend," are correct as they stand. Many other supposedly corrupt manuscript readings in Plautus have, during the last few years, been vindicated by the work of Leo, Skutsch, and other investigators. When our fallibility of judgment on such matters is being demonstrated afresh, even as we go to press with our new editions, does it not become us to treat the text with the utmost caution and to cherish an increasing respect for manuscript traditions? In establishing the text I have been guided by the principle that, before an editor is justified in introducing any conjecture unsupported by ancient testimony, the following conditions must exist: (1) it must be positively proved by careful investigation that the ancient testimony, if any exists, cannot possibly be correct; (2) the conjecture must have been sanctioned by the consensus of all competent critics. Until these requirements are met, all conjectures should be confined to critical notes. It is better to leave a passage unintelligible, with the certain imprint of the centuries upon it, than, at the risk of continuing the work of the corrupting hands that have wrought before us, to introduce mere conjectures that are not of such a nature as to command general acceptance. While, therefore, I believe I have duly considered all the important suggestions that have been made in recent years so far as they bear upon the text of the Captivi, and while I have mentioned many of these in my critical notes, I have introduced but few of them into my text. Such textual criticism as I have allowed myself to indulge in has been systematically excluded from the main commentary and relegated to an Appendix, which is also utilized for the citation of authorities for statements made in my notes, where such citation seemed desirable.

In preparing the book I have had access to all important editions of the Captivi; but I have consulted most frequently those of Brix-Niemeyer, Goetz and Schoell, Hallidie, Leo, Lindsay, Morris, and Sonnenschein. To all of these I hereby acknowledge my indebtedness for valuable help. I am further indebted to Messrs. B. H. Sanborn & Co. for their courtesy in allowing me to embody in the present volume a few pages from the Introduction to my edition of the Phormio, of which they are the publishers.

I must also express to Professor E. W. Fay, of the University of Texas, Professor Gonzalez Lodge, of Bryn Mawr College, and Professor J. C. Rolfe, of the University of Michigan, my gratitude for their kindness and generosity in devoting time and labor to reading the proof sheets and for many valuable suggestions. I owe most, however, to Professor C. E. Bennett, who has subjected every page of both my manuscript and the proof sheets to the most searching criticism, and suggested numerous improvements. Many of the merits which I hope the present volume may be found to have are in no small degree due to his scholarly touch.

H. C. ELMER.

ITHACA, May, 1900.

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2022 with funding from Kahle/Austin Foundation

INTRODUCTION.

I.

A SKETCH OF THE HISTORY OF GREEK AND ROMAN COMEDY.

1. THE ORIGIN OF THE GREEK DRAMA.

1. The Greek drama had its origin in the village festival that was wont to be held each year at the vintage time in honor of Dionysus, the god of wine, the bringer of good cheer. Dionysus, in the popular fancy, was supposed to have wandered through the world, accompanied by a band of satyrs and nymphs, spreading his worship among men, encountering countless dangers and hardships in his progress, now falling into the hands of pirates and thrown into chains, now aiding the gods in their war with the giants, now being torn to pieces at the command of the jealous Hera, but springing up again with new life, and finally triumphing over all obstacles and bringing joy and blessing to all mankind. It was customary among the country folk, when they gathered in the grapes, to celebrate the adventures of this god, whose bounty they were about to enjoy. One member of the company would impersonate the god himself, and the others would act the part of his attendant satyrs; and the story of the god's adventures would thus, in a rude and impromptu fashion, be enacted. Some parts of this story were bright and gay, while others were sad and tragic; and it was in these rude attempts to represent its different aspects that both comedy and tragedy had their origin. Tragedy, however, was earlier than comedy in reaching maturity.

2. THE EARLY GREEK COMEDY.

2. The word "comedy" (κωμῳδία) means literally the "song of revelry" (κῶμος, ᾄδειν), or possibly the song of the κῶμη, i.e. "village song." The Dorians, and especially one Susarion (about 580 B.C.), seem to deserve the credit of having first dramatized the rude dialogue in which comedy had its origin, and of having given it something like a literary form. The principal representative, however, of that branch of literature, before it reached the perfection it attained during the period of Pericles, was Epicharmus, a contemporary of Aeschylus. But comedy did not reach any high degree of development until it was taken up by the master artists of Athens in the time of Pericles. The conditions of Greek life at this period were peculiarly favorable for developing this branch of writing. The intellectual activity and the highly developed political life of the times worked together to bring it rapidly to a position of great importance and influence. Cratinus, Eupolis, and Phrynichus are the first to be mentioned as writers of the old Attic comedy; but these are of little importance in comparison with Aristophanes, who appeared upon the scene in the latter part of the fifth century B.C. (444-388) and became by far the most important representative of the old school. It lies, of course, in the nature of comedy to depict the gay and humorous; and at the time with which we are now dealing, the keen and absorbing interest taken by all classes in politics gave direction to the popular comedy. Public men and affairs formed its material. These were subjected to that keen wit with which the Athenians, above all others, were endowed. With reference to form and technique, it was natural enough that comedy should for the most part be modelled on the lines marked out by writers of tragedy, which already existed in a highly developed form.

The unfortunate result of the Peloponnesian War, which broke the self-conscious vigor of Athens, forms a turning-point in the history of Attic comedy. With the disappearance of eager participation of the people in public affairs, died out also their interest in them; other and narrower interests — above all, material interests — began to engross their attention. They had been wont to spare neither pains nor expense in organizing, equipping, and training a chorus as an essential feature of every play. But now, while they still continued for a time to furnish the chorus, they no longer felt the old pride in providing it with an elaborate outfit, or in training it when equipped; and their growing indifference ultimately resulted in its being given up altogether. In fact, the Plutus of Aristophanes, the latest of the eleven plays of that author which have been preserved to us, shows that a decided change in this respect has already taken place. In lieu of choral parts having an organic connection with the play, is found between the acts a song that has no such connection.

3. THE LATER GREEK COMEDY.

3. The new Attic comedy, which does not appear fully developed till the latter part of the fourth century, is almost wholly severed from all connection with public life, and shows, in comparison with the old comedy, a lack of variety in the subjects treated, and a lack of the old boldness in handling materials. Comedy now is a tame society play, dealing merely with the manners and customs of family life. The abuses practised in public life no longer receive notice even by so much as an allusion. At the same time personal attacks upon individuals have ceased; only typical characters, such as bragging soldiers, sponging parasites, and insolent sycophants, are held up to ridicule. As compensation for this narrower range of subjects, appears invention of new situations and of amusing complications out of which the same ever-recurring characters have to extricate themselves. In this respect the fruitful, untiring genius of the poets of the new comedy challenges our admiration, though our estimate of them is based upon mere fragments from their plays and upon Latin plays that are modelled after them.

Among the poets of the new Attic comedy, of whom there were more than sixty, the most distinguished in the judgment of antiquity was Menander (342-290 B.C.). Next to him, Philemon, Diphilus, Philippides, Posidippus, and Apollodorus of Carystus are to be named as the favorite writers of comedy. Of the original productions of these poets only a few fragments have come down to us. We have, however, Latin adaptations from some of their plays in the two great comic poets of Rome, Plautus and Terence.

Of course the transition from the old to the new comedy was a gradual one. It extended over a period of fifty years, from the Plutus of Aristophanes (presented first in 408 and again — this time in a revised form and without chorus and parabasis — in 388) to about the time of the Macedonian sovereignty (338). The best known poets of this period are Antiphanes and Alexis. Whether we should look upon this so-called middle comedy as forming a distinct type by itself may be questioned; but at any rate the division into the old and the new is an important one, and each of these two classes is marked by well-defined characteristics.

The new comedy, in its development, coincides with the political decline of Greece and with the gradual decay of her art. As compared with the old comedy, it shows in many respects unmistakable retrogression. As a natural result, however, of the conditions already indicated, it is free from that distinctly local coloring, which makes even a play of Aristophanes often unintelligible to one who is not familiar with the condition of affairs in Athens at the time the play was written; it has the cosmopolitan character which becomes, during the fourth and third centuries before Christ, more and more noticeable in Greek life. It was owing to this peculiar cosmopolitan character that the new comedy, about the middle of the third century before Christ, found a welcome in Rome—a city highly developed politically, but as yet without a literature. That the comic poets of Rome chose the material for their translations and adaptations exclusively from the new (and the so-called middle) comedy is not, then, due wholly to the fact that that kind of writing was still flourishing when Roman literature began.

4. ROMAN COMEDY.

4. The ancient Romans, like the Italians of to-day, had, as one of their notable characteristics, a fondness for the dramatic, and especially for the comic. Vergil, in Georg. II. 385–396 (cf. Hor. Ep. II. 1. 139 ff.), pictures the gayeties of rural festivals, at which improvised jests, in rude verse, were exchanged in animated dialogue. These versus Fescennini, as they are commonly called (probably after the town of Fescennia), had no literary importance; but still we see in them germs similar to those from which the Greeks developed their artistic comedy. It is interesting also to note that a process of development seems to have set in on Roman, much as it did on Greek, soil. As a demand was felt for something less rude than these versus Fescennini, a form of representation arose for which preparation was made beforehand, and less was intrusted to improvisation. To add to the interest of the entertainment, the verses were now accompanied by music and dancing, and the whole performance in this improved form took the name of Satura. These performances, if we may accept the common view regarding the meaning of the term saturae,<sup>1</sup> seem to have been devoid of any connected plot, but they demanded a certain amount of care and skill on the part of the performers, and accordingly a class of people began to devote special attention to acting as a profession. We must of course look upon these saturae (of which the contents were of a purely local character, and the structure even yet not artistic) as entirely different from the Greek comedies, as far as their contents and their structure were concerned. A nearer approach to dramatic form was made in the fabulae Atellanae, so called because they are said to have originated in the Campanian town of Atella. The fabulae Atellanae were broad farces in which figured stock characters analogous to the clown, pantaloon, and harlequin of a modern pantomime. Rude as all these performances were, they nevertheless awakened in the Roman public an interest in dramatic representations. Under favorable circumstances they might have developed into an artistic drama that would have been truly Roman in thought and feeling.

5. But there now appeared on the scene an influence that was destined to dominate the whole course of Roman literature. After the war with Pyrrhus, the Romans came into closer contact with the Greek cities of southern Italy and Sicily, and had their attention called to the creations of Greek genius. They never recovered from the spell that was thus cast about them. Instead of attempting to create a literature of their own along independent lines, they now devoted themselves chiefly to copying the masterpieces of Greece. The first fruits of this new influence were seen in mere translations and adaptations from the Greek. The comedies that were thus translated, or adapted, are called fabulae palliatae, from the Greek cloak (pallium) worn by the actors, to distinguish them from the fabulae togatae in which Roman manners were represented. The first writer to be mentioned in this connection is Livius Andronicus, who was born at Tarentum about 284 B.C. After the capture of his native city in 272 B.C., he became the slave of M. Livius Salinator, who, charmed by the talents of the young man, soon afterwards gave him his freedom. In 240 Livius was engaged to produce, as one of the attractions of the ludi Romani, two Latin plays, a tragedy and a comedy, adapted from Greek originals. Such dramatic entertainments had for a long time been regularly given in the original Greek in the towns of southern Italy, and so were more or less familiar to the Romans. These performances found such favor at Rome that from this time on they became a regular part of the games. Livius Andronicus must then be looked upon as having introduced a new era for the Roman stage. In Livy the historian (7. 2), the existence of a connected plot and the systematic arrangement of the contents are designated as the features that distinguished the new drama from the old saturnia. It was further distinguished by the employment of Greek metres and by differences in the form of representation. Only a few fragments of the plays of Livius have come down to us. We know, however, that he was held in so great esteem at Rome that, in honor of him, the temple of Minerva on the Aventine was appropriated to the use of scribae et histriones, who organized themselves into a sort of poets' guild.

---

<sup>1</sup> In an interesting paper on "The Dramatic Satura and the Old Comedy at Rome" (Amer. Jour. Phil. Vol. XV.), Hendrickson expresses the view that satura in Livy (7. 2) is merely the designation of an assumed Roman parallel to the old Greek comedy.

6. Another writer, likewise active in both tragedy and comedy, was Cn. Naevius, a native of Campania, born about 265 B.C. Being a Latin by descent, he took part in the First Punic War, a conflict which he afterward described in Saturnian verse. After 235 B.C. we find him noted at Rome as a fiery and popular poet, especially in the field of comedy. Fragments of thirty of his comedies have come down to us. The violent attacks which he made on the highest families of Rome led to his imprisonment and later to his banishment. He died in exile in 201 B.C., or, according to some authorities, a little later.

7. T. Maccius Plautus was a writer of comedies only. We have preserved to us only the most meagre details regarding his life. An uncertainty exists even about his name. It was long supposed to have been M. Accius Plautus. Ritschl (1806-1876) attempted<sup>1</sup> to prove that it was T. Maccius Plautus, and his conclusions have been commonly accepted by scholars; but it has recently been demonstrated<sup>2</sup> that the question as to his name cannot yet be considered definitely settled. We know that he was born at Sarsina, a small village in Umbria, about 254 B.C. On coming to Rome,<sup>3</sup> probably at an early age, he found employment at the hands of certain theatrical managers. What he saved from his earnings here he subsequently lost in foreign speculation, after which he returned penniless to Rome and was compelled to earn his bread at hard labor in a mill,—a duty generally reserved for the lowest slaves. His employment in the theatre, however, had interested him in the stage, and he resolved to turn to account the knowledge this experience had given him. He accordingly found time, even amid the unfavorable conditions surrounding him, to write comedies, and in a short time he became the most popular of comic poets. His death came in 184 B.C., but the popularity of his plays remained undiminished; and when, after the middle of the second century B.C., it became customary, instead of presenting new plays,

---

<sup>1</sup> Parerga, p. 3.

- Leo, Plautinische Forschungen (Berlin, 1895), pp. 72 ff. Compare also Cocchia in the Rivista di Filologia, XIII. pp. 97 ff., and Hülsen in Berl. Phil. Wochenschrift, VI. pp. 419 ff.

<sup>3</sup> The account here given of the early life of Plautus is the usual one, but few of the details are certain.

to bring the old again and again upon the stage (see p. xx), the comedies of Plautus long continued to be among the chief attractions of the theatre. So great indeed was his popularity that plays of other writers were frequently given out under his name, in the hope of insuring for them a more cordial welcome. That he was fully conscious of the hold he had upon the sympathies of the people is shown by the epitaph, still preserved, which he himself wrote for his own tomb. It is as follows:—

Postquam est mortem aptus Plautus, comoedia luget
Scaena est deserta ac dein risus, ludus iocusque Et numeri innumeri simul omnes collacrumarunt.

(After Plautus succumbed to death, Comedy put on mourning, the stage was left unoccupied, then Laughter, Mirth, and Merriment, and Verses numberless, all with one accord burst into tears.)

8. To Plautus at one time were ascribed one hundred and thirty plays. In iii. 3. 1, Gellius records an assertion of Varro that twenty-one of these plays were admitted by all to be genuine productions of Plautus. These so-called<sup>1</sup> fabulae Varronianae were probably the plays that have come down to us, viz. —

Amphitruo,	Epidicus,	Poenulus,
Asinaria,	Bacchides,	Persa,
Aulularia,	Mostellaria,	Rudens,
Captivi,	Menaechmi,	Stichus,
Curculio,	Miles Gloriosus,	Trinummus,
Casina,	Mercator,	Truculentus,
Cistellaria,	Pseudolus, and the Vidularia, of which only a few fragments remain. A few others of the one hundred and thirty plays may have been genuine productions of Plautus, but most of them were undoubtedly the works of some inferior poet or poets. While all of the twenty plays preserved to us are fabulae palliatae, Plautus treated his Greek originals with considerable freedom, and never hesitated to introduce distinctly Roman allusions, and to recast in a mould of his own the material offered him by his original, wherever he thought that by such recasting he could add to the humor or interest of the play. For the points of contrast between Plautus and Terence in this and other respects, see p. xix ff. As already indicated, the popularity of Plautus among his contemporaries was unrivalled. On the subsequent history of his plays, and the judgment of posterity regarding them, see Chapter II., below, p. xx.

---

<sup>1</sup> The term fabulae Varronianae is really a misnomer, as it implies that Varro passed judgment upon the plays to which he referred, whereas he merely recorded that consensu omnium Plauti esse censebantur.

9. Q. Ennius is chiefly noted for his epic poem called Annales,—in which he related, in eighteen books, the entire history of Rome from the earliest times down to his own,—for his saturae, and his tragedies. But he also attempted comedy, and so deserves mention here. He was born at Rudiae in Calabria, in 239 B.C. In 204 he was brought by the quaestor M. Porcius Cato from Sardinia to Rome, where he seems to have lived in moderate circumstances as teacher of Greek and as stage poet. In 184 B.C. he received the right of Roman citizenship, which he lived to enjoy for fifteen years. None of his comedies have come down to us—not even in fragments of any importance.

10. The next poet worthy of mention in this connection is Statius Caecilius, who enjoyed an enviable reputation among the ancients as a writer of palliatae, and who was an important forerunner of Terence. An Insubrian by birth, he came to Rome about 194 B.C., probably as a captive taken in war. Later, however, he was given his freedom. His first attempt at comedy failed, and was not even heard to the end by the impatient audience; but he toiled on till he won literary fame and a name among comic poets second only, as yet, to that of Plautus. He died soon after Ennius, with whom in life he had been on the most intimate terms.

11. Publius Terentius Afer was born at Carthage, about 190 B.C.<sup>1</sup> At an early age, he came to Rome as a slave of the senator Terentius Lucanus. His master, struck by the talent and the prepossessing appearance of the boy, not only caused him to be carefully educated, but also gave him his freedom. The associations to which he had been accustomed in the house of his master made it easy for him to keep up his connections with the nobility of Rome, and certain prominent members of this nobility became his firm friends. Chief among these were Scipio Africanus (the younger), C. Laelius, and L. Furius Philus.

12. The literary tendency of the times, as well as his own inclination, led the poet to devote his activity to the fabula palliata. Terence produced his first comedy, the Andria, at the ludi Megalenses, in April, 166 B.C. The aediles, who had charge of the games, had some misgivings about allowing the presentation of a play by an entirely unknown poet. He was accordingly induced to submit his play first to the older poet Caecilius, for approval. Regarding the meeting between these two poets, the following story is told. Terence found Caecilius at dinner, and, as the caller was meanly dressed, he was given a seat on a bench near the couch on which the great author was reclining, and was then given permission to read what he had written. After the first few verses had been read, Caecilius was so captivated by the young man's talents that he invited him to a place beside him upon the couch. He then listened attentively and with unbounded admiration to the remainder of the play.

---

<sup>1</sup> The date generally given is 185, in accordance with Suetonius, in his vita Terenti; but H. Sauppe (Nachr. d. Gött. ges., 1870, pp. 111 ff.) has made this date seem very improbable.

13. The order of presentation of the plays of Terence, during the lifetime of the poet, may be seen from the following table:—

Andria . . . . .	at the ludi Megalenses ,	166 B.C.
Hecyra <sup>1</sup> . . . . .	“ “ “	165 B.C.
Heauton timorumenos . . . . .	“ “ “	163 B.C.
Eunuchus . . . . .	“ “ “	161 B.C.
Phormio . . . . .	“ “ Romani ,	161 B.C.
Hecyra . . . . .	“ “ funerales of Aemilius Paulus,	160 B.C. <sup>2</sup>
Adelphoe . . . . .	“ “ “ of Aemilius Paulus,	160 B.C.
Hecyra . . . . .	“ “ Romani ,	160 B.C. <sup>3</sup>

14. It is not to be wondered at that the earliest writers, in adapting the productions of foreign genius to Roman ears, should give them something of a native character, and we accordingly find that all the plays of Plautus bear Latin titles (Asinaria, Aulularia, Captivi, etc.), except in plays like the Amphitruo and the Epidicus, where the title is taken from the Greek name of a person in the play. Attention has already been called to the fact that the plays of Plautus abound in Roman allusions. Later, however, as the influence of Greek culture came to be more widespread, there was an ever-increasing tendency to make the Latin plays more nearly like the Greek from which the plots were taken. Indeed, the contemporaries of Terence, among them his chief adversary, Lucius Lanuvinus, made it a point of attack that he sometimes departed so far from his Greek original as to weave into the general plot of his drama such scenes from other Greek comedies as particularly struck his fancy. This process of combining parts of different plays into one was maliciously called contaminatio. Except in this one respect,

---

<sup>1</sup> This attempted presentation, however, proved a failure; and tradition accordingly assigns the Heauton to the second place, the Eunuchus to the third, etc.

<sup>2</sup> Second unsuccessful presentation.

<sup>3</sup> Third, and successful, presentation.

Terence has followed his Greek originals very closely, and the Roman allusions, which are so common in Plautus, are almost entirely wanting in Terence.

15. All six plays of Terence met with great applause from the public, though the Hecyra was not received with favor until the third attempt to present it.

16. After the third production of the Hecyra, in 160 B.C., Terence left Rome for Greece, probably to acquire a more intimate knowledge of the life and customs of the people of that country. In the following year, 159 B.C., the poet died, while on the point of returning to Rome with translations which he had recently made of other comedies.

17. The last writer of palliatae who is of sufficient importance to call for notice here was Turpilius, who was a contemporary of Terence and who lived till 103 B.C. Thirteen titles of plays written by him are known to us, but only a few fragments of the plays themselves are preserved. Judging from these fragments, his style was livelier than that of Terence, and of a more popular character.

18. It will be seen from this brief sketch of Roman comedy that the two names that stand out in high relief among Rome's comic poets are those of Plautus and Terence. While these two poets both alike represent the class of comedy known as fabulae palliatae, and while they take as their models Greek poets of the same school and the same period, they present, nevertheless, with reference to each other, many sharply contrasted characteristics. Plautus wrote for the crowd, and his language is that of the street and the barber shop; Terence wrote primarily for the cultured few, and his language is that of the salon. The wit of Plautus, while often coarse and obscene, is fresh, original, sparkling, spontaneous, and is a bid for a loud laugh; that of Terence is more refined, studied, subdued, and usually expects hardly more than a smile. Plautus, while under restraint, as an imitator of models necessarily is, displays, nevertheless, abundant creative fancy, and frequently startles one with clever originalities. Terence is satisfied with fidelity to his Greek model, departing from it rarely, and only when he feels that his artistic purpose requires it. Plautus is given to exaggerated puns, striking effects, sharp contrasts. Terence aims at truth, accuracy, and artistic finish. The style of Plautus is reckless and extravagant, of the do-all and dare-all sort, and his words are often imported from the Greek or manufactured to suit the occasion. The style of Terence is more sober and sedate, and his words are those sanctioned by good Latin usage. Plautus can inflict upon an individual such a name as Vaniloquidorus Virginisvendonides Nugiepiloquides Argentumexterebronides Tedigniloquides Nummosexpalponides Quodsemelarrripides Nunquameripides (Pers. 702); Terence would consider such word-making beneath his dignity. Plautus aimed at making fun, sacrificing or subordinating everything to this one purpose; Terence aimed at drawing a true picture of Greek life in the purest colloquial Latin, so far, at any rate, as Greek life was correctly portrayed in the poets from whom he drew his material. In general, the excellences of Plautus are largely such as depend upon spontaneity of genius; those of Terence are the result of thought and study and painstaking in reproducing, in the most artistic form, the excellences of his Greek models.

II.

HISTORY OF THE TEXT OF PLAUTUS.

19. After the death of Terence, the writing of fabulae palliatae almost ceased.<sup>1</sup> In the absence of new productions, the custom now began of presenting again upon the stage the plays of former poets. It was but natural that many changes should be made in these old plays to make them better suited to the altered conditions under which they were to be reproduced. The text of Plautus has suffered not a little by the arbitrary changes that were made for such purposes. His plays continued to be put on the stage for a long time after the poet's death, and there can be no doubt that they are preserved to us in the form which they received to fit them for these later reproductions. Some of the prologues now prefixed to the plays may have been written for performances given about the middle of the first century B.C.<sup>1</sup> To about the same time probably belong the acrostic arguments, or metrical summaries, prefixed to all the plays of Plautus except the Bacchides. For the non-acrostic arguments, which belong to a later period, see p. xxiii. As early as the second half of the second century B.C., scholars began, in imitation and emulation of the Greek grammarians, to turn their attention to the study of fabulae palliatae. The texts of the comedians were brought together in suitable form for reading, special care being taken to preserve, as far as possible, different readings wherever such existed. Notes, too, on the history of the different plays were collected and arranged in a connected manner. Lastly, Roman scholars wrote various treatises on the scenic and linguistic peculiarities of the old comedians, and on other topics of interest to the student of literature. Among these were L. Accius (the famous writer of tragedy), Porcius Licinus, Volcacius Sedigitus, L. Aelius Stilo, Aurelius Opilius, Q. Cosconius, Serv. Clodius, and, above all, M. Terentius Varro, whose works, distinguished as they were for their learning and practical wisdom, formed the chief source of information for the historians of literature. The material for these works was drawn from the actors' copies of the plays, so far as they could be procured, and from the records of magistrates regarding the productions of plays brought out under their supervision. Consideration for the convenience of the reader led to the practice of indicating at the beginning of each scene the characters who take part in that scene, and of dividing plays into acts (see p. xxx). But, after a time, interest in the performances of the early drama began to flag, and in the Augustan period not merely had such performances ceased to be popular, but so little interest was felt in Plautus himself that his plays now found but few readers, and the copies produced during this period were carelessly and indifferently made. Many of the corruptions in the text undoubtedly date from this period of indifference. It was during this period, also, that the plays became separated from one another, each going its own way through the hands of copyists, and each meeting with its own fate. This independent circulation of individual plays accounts in part for the marked differences in the condition of the texts. Some plays passed through the hands of very careless and ignorant copyists, and are still full of the corruptions they then received; others fell into worthier hands, and have come down to us in a more satisfactory form; but all alike were less carefully treated than would have been the case if a livelier and a more general interest had been felt in the author. This period of indifference toward, and neglect of, the plays of Plautus lasted till about the second half of the first century A.D.

---

<sup>1</sup> Turpilius probably ceased writing at an early date (Ritschl, Parerga, p. 188, Rem.).

---

<sup>1</sup> See, however, for a discussion of the date of composition of the prologues, Leo, Plautinische Forschungen, pp. 170 ff.; Trautwein, de prologorum Plautinorum indole atque natura (Berlin, 1890).

20. At that time there arose a famous scholar and literary critic, Marcus Valerius Probus, who interested himself in the critical study of Rome's greatest poets. It is certain that he revised the works of Lucretius, Vergil, and Horace. Possibly also, as Leo<sup>1</sup> assumes, he made a collection, from all quarters, of the scattered and neglected plays of Rome's greatest comedian, Plautus. At any rate, some such collection must have been made by some one at about this time. There is, however, no reason to suppose that it consisted only of the twenty-one plays now assigned to Plautus. It is probable that other plays were extant and were included in the collection, and that another grammarian published a critical edition of twenty-one of these plays, including in this corpus only such as Varro had said (see p. xv) were admitted by everybody to be undoubtedly genuine productions of Plautus. After publication, such an edition must have become the basis of all Plautine study, an assumption which accounts for the fact that all the other plays became scattered again and were gradually lost. The text of Plautus must, by this time, have become very corrupt. To render it readable, many arbitrary alterations were undoubtedly made; to render it intelligible, frequent comments and glosses were added. In this way numerous interpolations crept in, and the text became still further corrupted. It should be noticed, however, that the corruptions dating from this period are chiefly due to a lively interest in the plays, while the earlier corruptions above referred to (p. xxii) were due to carelessness and neglect.

---

<sup>1</sup> Plautinische Forschungen, pp. 21 ff.

21. The second century A.D. was characterized by a display of erudition, and a popular field for such display was that offered by archaic Latin. Great zeal was shown in the study of the early poets. The principal representative of the learning of this period is C. Sulpicius Apollinaris. It is possible that the non-acrostic arguments (see p. xxi) were written by this critic. Plautus was, however, doomed to be forgotten again. In the Middle Ages he seems to have been practically unknown. Hrotswitha von Gandersheim, an imitator of Terence, who flourished in the latter half of the tenth century, knows nothing of him. At the beginning of the fifteenth century all but eight of the plays were still unknown. These eight were Amphitruo, Asinaria, Aulularia, Captivi, Curculio, Casina, Cistellaria, and Epidicus, and these are preserved in a large number of extant manuscripts, dating from the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. A manuscript (D), containing some of these eight plays and also the remaining twelve, was found in Germany about 1428, and is now in the Vatican at Rome. It dates from the twelfth century. The oldest manuscript (A) of Plautus now extant, and indeed one of the oldest Latin manuscripts preserved to us, was discovered by Cardinal Mai in 1815, in the Ambrosian library at Milan, and is known as the Ambrosian palimpsest. It was written in the fourth or fifth century, and is of course of great importance in establishing the text, though it lacks the Amphitruo, Asinaria, Aulularia, and Curculio entirely, and preserves the other plays in a more or less incomplete form. Two other manuscripts (B and C) were used by Camerarius in the sixteenth century, one of these (B, of the eleventh century) containing all of the twenty plays, the other (of the twelfth century) only the last twelve. A collation of a very important manuscript—viz. the one used by Turnebus, a famous French scholar of the sixteenth century—has recently been discovered by Lindsay.<sup>1</sup>

22. Somewhat more than forty years after the discovery of the manuscript containing the twelve lost plays, appeared the first complete printed edition of Plautus,<sup>2</sup> that of Georgius Merula, published in Venice in 1472. From that time on there was an almost constant succession of editions of either a part or the whole of Plautus, until toward the end of the seventeenth century. Then interest in Plautine studies again died out and during the whole of the eighteenth century practically nothing of any importance was done in this field. The beginning of the present century was marked by the appearance of Bothe's edition (1809-11) in four volumes, the last consisting of a commentary of 872 closely printed pages. The activity thus renewed has continued till the present time, and has resulted in the appearance of numerous important editions and volumes of Plautine studies, culminating with the completion, in 1896, of the monumental critical edition of Goetz and Schoell, and that of Leo. For further information and enumeration of important editions see, for instance, Ritschl's Opuscula, II. pp. 34 ff.; Teuffel-Schwabe, Geschichte der Römischen Literatur (translated by Warr), §§ 97 and 99.

---

<sup>1</sup> Sonnenschein, however (Class. Rev. for May, 1899), expresses doubt as to whether Lindsay's discovery really represents the readings of the codex Turnebi.

<sup>2</sup> There was, however, a somewhat earlier edition of the other eight plays.

III.

DRAMATIC ENTERTAINMENTS, THE ACTORS, THE STAGE, ETC.

23. It should be noted that, for some time after Livius Andronicus, dramatic performances in Rome were given only at the ludi Romani or maximi (in September) under the supervision of the curule aediles. Somewhat later they formed a part likewise of the Megalesia (in April), given under the direction of the curule aediles, of the ludi plebei (in November), given by the plebeian aediles, and, after 211 or 212 B.C., of the ludi Apollinares (in July), given by the praetor urbanus. To the officials who conducted the games, a specified sum of money was furnished by the state, for the purpose of defraying the expense attending the occasion. In the course of time, as the games took on a more elaborate character, the sum donated by the state had to be increased repeatedly, and even then those who took them in charge frequently found it necessary to make liberal contributions from their own private means. Besides the games that were thus celebrated on behalf of the state, there were also others given on extraordinary occasions, viz. ludi funebres (or funerales), in honor of celebrated men, those accompanying dedications and triumphs, and those given as votive offerings.

24. Down to 174 B.C. the dramatic performances took place near the temple of the deity chiefly concerned in the festivities.<sup>1</sup> Permanent theatres of stone, such as were later built on a scale of great grandeur, were as yet unknown. When a play was to be produced, a wooden stage was erected for the purpose, and then taken down after the performance. This stage was ordinarily built near the foot of some hill, or slope, so that the rising ground might afford convenient seats for the spectators, while those in front would not obstruct the view of those in the rear. On such a slope the people assembled under the open sky. As no seats were provided for their accommodation, they usually sat, or reclined, upon the ground. The more fastidious sometimes had stools brought for them from their homes, although this was looked upon as a mark of effeminacy and was even forbidden. In 179 B.C., a stage of stone was erected near the temple of Apollo, but this was of small dimensions and was probably intended for use only at the ludi Apollinares. Five years later, arrangements were made, on the part of the state, for the building of a substantial, permanent stage,<sup>2</sup> but this, if it was actually built, seems soon to have disappeared. In 146 B.C., L. Mummius built a complete theatre, provided with rows of seats, but this was of wood, and was taken down after each performance. Finally, in 55 B.C., was dedicated the stone theatre of Cn. Pompeius, the first permanent theatre erected in Rome. It is said to have been capable of accommodating forty thousand spectators.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> Funeral games (perhaps also the ludi Romani) took place in the forum. That the ludi Apollinares at least, in the beginning, were given in the Circus Maximus, is clear from Liv. 25. 12, 14.

<sup>2</sup> Ritschl, Parerg. p. 227.

25. The dramatic performances usually took place between prandium (about twelve o'clock) and cena (after three o'clock), so that when we consider the other amusements that formed a part of the day's exercises, it seems hardly possible that more than one play could, as a rule, have been presented on any one day. Later, in Cicero's time, the custom of giving these performances in the early morning was introduced.

26. When a play was to be given, the fact was announced by a crier (praeco), that the people might assemble at the proper place. Immediately before the performance began, there was a tituli pronuntiatio, an announcement of the subject of the play; but sometimes the prologue itself conveyed to the audience their first information regarding the subject of the play and the name of the poet. The actors were slaves, or, in later times, freedmen, this profession being considered beneath the dignity of free-born men. The dominus, or general manager of the troupe was a freedman, who also took part in the acting and was sometimes called the actor (i.e. par excellence). At first, poets were wont to bring out their plays themselves, hiring slaves and freedmen for the purpose, but this practice ceased at an early date, and, as early as Plautus, the poet himself was no longer actor also. The Stichus of Plautus, for instance, according to the didascalía, was brought out by T. Publius Pello, who is severely criticised by the poet himself (Bacch. 214 f.) for the manner in which he put the Epidicus on the stage.

27. To the theatrical managers (domini) application was made by those who wished to give dramatic entertainments.

---

<sup>1</sup> Lanciani (The Ruins and Excavations of Ancient Rome, p. 459) gives the number of loca as 17,580.

The poets had business relations, for the most part, only with these managers, who bought, or rejected, their plays, and who accordingly were very influential in determining the fate, and encouraging the development, of poetic talent. In exceptional cases, however, the givers of the games, as they were men of experience in such matters and naturally felt great interest in the success of the performances, had a voice in the selection of the plays to be presented. All financial risk attending the presentation of a play was borne by the theatrical manager. As it was of great importance to the givers of the games that the people should be pleased with the amusements provided for them at such great expense, a reward was offered to the dominus, varying in amount according to the success of the play given by him.<sup>1</sup> This of course was calculated to secure the choice of the best possible play and to assure its presentation in the best possible manner. The dominus on his part was accustomed, after a successful performance, to reward the deserving actors of his company with a banquet. Cf. Plaut. Cist. 785; Rud. 1418 ff.

28. As regards the external equipment necessary for the dramatic performances, this was provided by contractors (conductores; cf. Plaut. Asin. Prol. 3), under the supervision of those who gave the games.<sup>2</sup>

29. Among the Greeks, the number of actors allowed upon the stage at any one time was limited. This was not the case among the Romans, as there could be any number of actors which convenience might dictate. The dominus gregis did not, of course, care to increase the number unnecessarily, on account of the additional expense, preferring rather to produce a play with a few superior actors than with a larger number of indifferent ones. The Latin fabula palliata resembled the later period of the new Greek comedy in having no chorus. In exceptional cases, there seems to have been something similar to it, probably in imitation of the Greek original, e.g. the chorus of fishermen in Plaut. Rud. (vs. 290 ff.); but this was placed, not in the orchestra, but upon the stage. There is nothing of the kind, however, in Terence.

---

<sup>1</sup> The assertion of Mommsen, Röm. Gesch. I.<sup>8</sup> p. 889, that the poets received their reward only when the play did not prove a failure, has not been substantiated.

<sup>2</sup> The costumes of the actors were provided by the choragus, whom Mommsen (Röm. Gesch. I. p. 886) regards as identical with the dominus gregis.

30. Female characters were, until comparatively late times (cf. Donatus on And. IV. 3. 1), impersonated by male actors in female dress.

31. The custom of using masks seems to have been introduced, soon after Terence, by the theatrical managers, Cincius Faliscus and Minucius Prothymus. Up to that time actors depended for their effects upon wigs and rouge.

32. The plot in a fabula palliata is invariably laid in a Greek town or colony, usually in Athens. When the action was supposed to be taking place in a town, the proscænium represented an open street in that town. The background was ordinarily formed by three private houses, corresponding to the three entrances to the royal palace as represented on the stage in Greek tragedy; in place of one of these was sometimes the front of a temple, when the character of the play made such a building necessary. Narrow alleys also opened from the back of the stage into the street (cf. Phorm. 891 f.). Upon the stage stood, according to Donatus, two altars — one on the right dedicated to Liber, another on the left, dedicated to the deity chiefly concerned in the festivities of which the production of the play formed a part. On this point, however, there are differences of opinion.<sup>1</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> See Dziatzko's note, in the Einleitung to his Phormio, p. 25 (Dziatzko-Hauler, p. 36).

On the right (from the point of view of the spectators) the street was supposed to lead to the forum and the interior of the town; on the left, to the harbor and foreign countries.

IV.

DIVISION OF PLAYS INTO ACTS AND SCENES.

33. A division of dramas into acts was already known in the time of Plautus and Terence, but it does not as a rule seem to have been clearly marked by the writers themselves. It was left rather to the discretion of the theatrical manager to introduce intermissions at suitable places in the play. This is perhaps the reason why the manuscripts, at least all the oldest of them, have no division into acts. Definite divisions were, however, established by the grammarians and the commentators of antiquity (though these sometimes differ among themselves), and five was settled upon as the proper number of acts for a drama (cf. Horace, A. P. 189 f.).

34. The division into scenes, on the other hand, is very old. It was customary to place before each scene a complete list of all the characters to appear in that particular scene. In the copies which formed the basis of our manuscripts, each character who had anything to say was denoted by a letter of the Greek alphabet, which letter served also in the text to designate that character. For the division into scenes, two principles seem to have been followed in our manuscripts. According to one of these, a new scene is formed by the exit or the entrance of a single actor. Exceptions to this rule are formed by cases in which a person leaves the stage only for a moment, or in which the persons who remain behind have little to say, and that of no importance, until the entrance of another actor, or other actors, and the opening of a new scene (e.g. Phorm. 219, 778, 816). According to the other principle, a new scene is indicated only where the change of actors introduces an important turn in the plot.

V.

THE METRES OF PLAUTUS AND THE APPROPRIATENESS OF DIFFERENT METRES TO DIFFERENT MOODS.

35. The metres found in Plautus are chiefly iambic, trochaic, anapaestic, cretic, and bacchic. A peculiarity of iambic, trochaic, and anapaestic verses is that they are, at least in Greek poetry, measured by dipodies, i.e. pairs of feet, instead of by single feet, each dipody having one main and one subordinate ictus. Accordingly, a verse of four feet is called a dimeter (instead of a tetrameter), one of six feet a trimeter (instead of a hexameter), etc. Frequently, however, and especially with reference to early Latin poetry, these verses are called quaternarii, senarii, etc., names given them solely with reference to the number of feet contained in each, the distinctions between the odd and the even feet having been, for the most part, lost sight of by early Latin poets.

36. The verse of the early poets has always presented many difficulties. Even in the time of Cicero the most common and least difficult of these metres—namely the iambic senarius—was apparently but little understood.<sup>1</sup> After a time the plays came to be actually written as so much continuous prose. In most of our manuscripts of them, no attempt is made to divide the text into verses at all. The same is true of all the early editions prior to that of Pylades (1506). It is only during the present century that most of the laws governing these early metres have been discovered. Even yet many difficulties remain, and it is frequently impossible to determine definitely the character of individual verses or the points at which verse-division should be made. In the Captivi, for instance, there are twenty verses (212, 232-234, 497-515, 836) which the recent critical edition of Goetz and Schoell makes no attempt to assign to definite metres. On account of the difficulties of Plautine and Terentian metres, it has, since the time of Bentley, been customary for each editor to mark the main, or primary, ictuses in each verse, in order to indicate what seems to him individually, or to editors generally, the proper scansion.

---

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Cic. Orator, 55, 184: At comitorum senarii propter similitudinem sermonis sic saepe sunt abiecti, ut non numquam vix in eis numerus et versus intellegi possit.

37. For the proper understanding of the classification and discussion of metres about to be given, the following definitions should be noted:—

- (a) arsis, used in this book to indicate the unaccented part of a foot.
- (b) thesis, used in this book to indicate the accented part of a foot. (See, however, note on p. xlv.)
- (c) diaeresis, that sort of division (within a verse) which is caused by the coincidence of the end of a word with the end of a foot, e.g. in the verse—

· Ítĕ dŏ|múm sătŭ|răe uĕnĭt | Hĕspĕrŭs | ítĕ cǎ|pĕllāe,

there is diaeresis after uenit and again after Hesperus.

- (d) hiatus, the coming together of two vowels (each with its own natural quantity), caused by the non-elision of a final vowel before a word beginning with a vowel or h (but see Intro. § 74).
- (e) semi-hiatus, the occurrence of a final long vowel, or a diphthong, before a word beginning with a vowel or

h, with the result that the long vowel or diphthong is shortened but not elided; e.g. quĩ aget in —

Quĩǎ prī|mās pār|tīs quĩ ǎ|gět, ǐs ǎ|rīt Phōr|mĩō.

- (f) syllaba anceps, the uncertain syllable, a term given to the final syllable of a verse for the reason that this syllable may, in any Latin verse, be either long or short, regardless of the theoretical requirements of the metre.
- (g) clausula, the close, a short verse used to end a series of longer verses, always with the same rhythm as the preceding verse and subject to the same metrical treatment as the complete verses of the same rhythm.

38. The metres of Plautus, so far as they are found in the Captivi, may be divided into the following varieties:—

[N.B. — Whenever two short syllables are substituted for an accented long syllable of the normal foot, the accent falls on the first short syllable, e.g. — / becomes — ˘ ˘, ˘ ˘ ˘ ˘; / — becomes ˘ ˘ —, ˘ ˘ ˘ ˘; / ˘ becomes ˘ ˘ ˘; ˘ / becomes ˘ ˘ ˘, etc. In what is said below regarding the association of the several metres with different moods, it will of course be understood that the characteristics mentioned are not always prominent. The moods indicated are, in each case, to be regarded merely as those most frequently associated with the verse.]

1. IAMBIC.

39. In all iambic verses, any one of the following feet is allowed as a substitute for the pure iambus,  $\cup \underline{\cup}$ : (a) anapaest,  $\cup \underline{\cup} \underline{\cup}$ ; (b) spondee,  $> \underline{\cup}$ ; (c) tribrach,  $\cup \cup \cup$ ; (d) dactyl,  $> \cup \cup$ ; (e) proceleusmatic,  $\cup \cup \cup$ . It should be noticed, however, that, in an acatalectic verse, the last foot is invariably a pure iambus (with the privilege of course, of the syllaba anceps).<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> See Introd. § 37 (f).

40. Iambic Senarius (Trimeter Acatalectic). — The caesuras may be classified as follows, in the order of their frequency: (a) the so-called penthemimeral, after the arsis of the third foot, e.g.<sup>1</sup>  $\cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \parallel \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \text{—}$ ; (b) the hepthemimeral, after the arsis of the fourth foot, e.g.  $\cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \text{—} \parallel \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \text{—}$ , in which case there is often diaeresis after, or a secondary caesura in, the second foot.

41. In connection with this verse, the following peculiarities call for notice: (1) an anapaest is seldom allowed immediately after a dactyl, or a tribrach; (2) when a proceleusmatic is used, its ictus-syllable nearly always begins a word, and the ictus and word-accent, with rare exceptions, coincide. The proceleusmatic is most common in the first foot; it is rare in the fifth foot.

42. Nearly all the plays of Plautus open with iambic senarii. This is the verse of ordinary narrative or dialogue, sometimes also of soliloquy, and seems the one best adapted for making the audience acquainted with the general situation. Its movement may be illustrated by the following lines: —

“The tempest nears us; darkly rolls the angry sea;
The thunder mutters; lightnings leap from cloud to cloud.”

As the plot develops, the metre changes to suit the varying moods of the characters.

43. Iambic Octonarius (Tetrameter Acatalectic). — The caesura of this verse falls into two classes: (a) It may be after the fifth arsis, i.e.  $\cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \text{—} \parallel \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \text{—}$ ; (b) it may be at the end of the fourth foot, e.g.  $\cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \text{—} \parallel \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \cup \text{—} \text{—}$ , in which case the fourth foot is treated like the final foot of the verse, i.e. it must be a pure iambus (with the privilege of the syllaba anceps), and hiatus is sometimes allowed after it.

---

<sup>1</sup> In what follows, the primary ictus is represented by “, and the secondary by ‘.

44. The anapaest is never (or very rarely) allowed in this verse after a tribrach or a dactyl.

45. Iambic octonarii are suited to an animated, impassioned mood. Compare:—

“And furious every charger neighed to join the dreadful revelry.”

46. Iambic Septenarius (Tetrameter Catalectic), called septenarius because only seven feet are complete, though it really contains seven and a half feet.—The caesura is (a) usually after the fourth foot, which then presents the same peculiarities of treatment as the octonarius under similar conditions; (b) sometimes after the arsis of the fifth foot.

47. Iambic septenarii, which in Latin occur only in comic poets, are found chiefly in serio-comic strains. Compare:—

“A captain bold of Halifax, who lived in country quarters.”

48. Iambic Quaternarius (Dimeter Acatalectic), rare in Plautus (see verse 197).—This verse is usually employed as a clausula in connection with octonarii and septenarii.

49. The movement of this verse is illustrated by the first and third verses of the following stanza:—

The rí|vers rúsh | intó | the seá,
By castle and town they go;
The wínds | behínd | them mér|rílý
Their noisy trumpets blow.

50. Iambic Ternarius (Dimeter Catalectic).—This verse is used as a clausula (see verse 784).

51. Iambic Monometer Hypercatalectic (i.e. a monometer + another syllable).—Two such monometers are found together in verse 215<sup>b</sup>, for which the scheme is—

∪ ≪ ∪ ∠ | —      — ≪ ∪ ∠ | —

2. TROCHAIC.

52. Any one of the substitutes allowed in iambic verses for the pure iambus may, except as indicated below, also stand here for the pure trochee,  $\angle \cup$ , the metrical accent being, however, in all cases, upon the first syllable of the foot.

53. Trochaic Octonarius (Tetrameter Acatalectic). — This verse is used only in lyric parts of the plays, in connection with other verses, to form special rhythmic systems.

54. The caesura is (a) usually after the fourth foot, from which foot the dactyl is then excluded; (b) sometimes in the fourth or fifth foot. In this verse a tribrach, a spondee, or an anapaest is allowed even in the eighth foot.

55. Trochaic octonarii are peculiar to those parts of a scene that are intended to be sung. The movement of this verse may be illustrated by the following: —

“Beams of moon, like burning lances, through the tree-tops flash and glisten.”

56. Trochaic Septenarius (Tetrameter Catalectic), called septenarius because only seven feet are complete, though it really contains seven and a half feet. — This is a favorite verse with Plautus. The caesura may be (a) after the fourth trochee, in place of which a dactyl is not then admissible; (b) after the fifth arsis, generally with a minor caesura after the fourth thesis or the third arsis. In this verse, as in iambic verse, an anapaest is very rare immediately after a dactyl. The seventh foot is commonly kept pure, though a tribrach or a dactyl is occasionally found. The last syllable of the verse may, as usual, be either long or short.

Trochaic septenarii are suited to a somewhat more quiet, peaceful frame of mind. Compare: —

“Tell me not in mournful numbers, life is but an empty dream.”

57. Trochaic Tripody Acatalectic. — This is perhaps illustrated in verse 207<sup>b</sup>. If the scansion is correctly indicated in the text, the scheme is —

// ∪ ∟ ∪ ∪ ∪

3. ANAPAESTIC.

58. In an anapaestic verse, any one of the following feet is allowed as a substitute for the pure anapaest, ∪ ∪ ∟: (a) spondee, — ∟; (b) dactyl, — ∪ ∪; (c) proceleusmatic, ∪ ∪ ∪ ∪. But the final thesis of an acatalectic verse cannot be resolved into short syllables.

59. Anapaestic Octonarius (Tetrameter Acatalectic). — In this verse there is regularly diaeresis after the fourth foot, where hiatus and syllaba anceps are then allowed as at the end of a verse.

60. Anapaestic Septenarius (Tetrameter Catalectic), called septenarius, because only seven feet are complete, though it really contains part of another foot. — The characteristics of the seven feet are in general the same as those of corresponding feet in the octonarius.

61. Anapaestic Quaternarius (Dimeter Acatalectic). — This occurs in verse 206<sup>a</sup>, for which the scheme is —

∪ ∪ // — ∪ ∪ — // — ∟

4. CRETIC.

62. For the normal cretic, // ∪ ∟, may be substituted (a) the first paeon, // ∪ ∪ ∪; (b) the fourth paeon, ∪ ∪ ∪ ∟; (c) the molossus, // > ∟; (d) the choriambus, // ∪ ∟; (e) the ionic a minore, ∪ ∪ > ∟; (f) the ionic a maiore, // > ∪ ∪.

63. Cretic Tetrameter Acatalectic. — In this verse the first paeon, probably the ionic a maiore, and (with rare exceptions) the molossus, are excluded from the final foot. The normal scheme is

$\underline{\cup} \cup \underline{\cup} | \underline{\cup} \cup \underline{\cup} | \underline{\cup} \cup \underline{\cup} | \underline{\cup} \cup \underline{\cup}.$

Cretic Dimeter Acatalectic. — This verse presents the same peculiarities as the tetrameter.

5. BACCHIC.

64. For the normal bacchius,  $\cup \underline{\cup} \underline{\cup}$ , may be substituted (a) the fourth paeon,  $\cup \underline{\cup} \cup \underline{\cup}$ ; (b) the second paeon,  $\cup \underline{\cup} \cup \cup$ ; (c) the molossus,  $> \underline{\cup} \underline{\cup}$ ; (d) the ionic a minore,  $\cup \underline{\cup} \underline{\cup}$ ; (e) the choriambus,  $> \underline{\cup} \cup \underline{\cup}$ ; or (f) the ionic a maiore,  $> \underline{\cup} \cup \cup$ .

65. Bacchic Tetrameter. — A caesura is commonly found after the second or third iambus and occasionally diaeresis after the second bacchius (see G.-L. 812). The normal scheme is

$\cup \underline{\cup} \underline{\cup} | \cup \underline{\cup} \underline{\cup} | \cup \underline{\cup} \underline{\cup} | \cup \underline{\cup} \underline{\cup}.$

6. COMPOUND VERSES.

66. Cretic Dimeter + Trochaic Dipody Acatalectic. — The normal scheme is  $\underline{\cup} \cup \underline{\cup} | \underline{\cup} \cup \underline{\cup} || \underline{\cup} \cup \underline{\cup} \cup$ . In the Captivi this is found only in verse 214.

67. Metres other than those above described are comparatively rare in Plautus; and as they are not found in the Captivi, they do not concern us here.

68. TABLE OF METRES OF THE CAPTIVI.

1-194 . . . iambic senarii.	198-199 . . . . . iambic octonarii.
195-196. . . iambic octonarii.	200 . . . . . iambic septenarius.
197. . . . . iambic dimeter acatalectic.	201 . . . . . (?)
	202 . . . . . iambic senarius.

203. . . . iambic octonarius.	233. . . . iambic dimeter catalectic.
204. . . . cretic tetrameter (incomplete).	234. . . . iambic dimeter acatalectic.
205. . . . cretic tetrameter acatalectic.	235-239. cretic tetrameters acatalectic.
206 <sup>a</sup> . . . anapaestic dimeter acatalectic.	240-241. trochaic octonarii.
206 <sup>b</sup> . . . cretic tetrameter acatalectic.	242-360. trochaic septenarii.
207 . . . cretic dimeter acatalectic.	361-384. iambic senarii.
207 <sup>b</sup> . . . trochaic tripod acatalectic.	385-497. trochaic septenarii.
208-209. trochaic octonarii.	498-515. uncertain.
210-211. cretic tetrameters acatalectic. (For a different division, see Goetz & Schoell.)	516-524. iambic octonarii.
212. . . . iambic dimeter catalectic.	525. . . . iambic senarius.
213. . . . cretic tetrameter acatalectic.	526-529. trochaic septenarii.
214. . . . cretic dimeter acatalectic + trochaic dipody acatalectic.	530. . . . iambic senarius.
215 <sup>a</sup> . . . anapaestic dimeter acatalectic.	531. . . . trochaic septenarius.
215 <sup>b</sup> . . . two iambic monometers hypercatalectic.	532. . . . iambic senarius.
216-222. cretic tetrameters acatalectic.	533. . . . iambic octonarius.
223. . . . iambic septenarius.	534. . . . trochaic septenarius.
224. . . . no verse with this number appears in the text, owing to the manner of verse-division adopted.	535. . . . trochaic octonarius.
225. . . . iambic octonarius.	536-540. iambic octonarii.
226-230. bacchic tetrameters acatalectic.	541-658. trochaic septenarii.
231. . . . iambic septenarius.	659-767. iambic senarii.
232. . . . trochaic septenarius.	768-769. trochaic septenarii.
	770-771. iambic octonarii.
	772. . . . trochaic septenarius (?).
	773. . . . iambic octonarius.
	774-775. trochaic septenarii.
	776-780. iambic octonarii.
	781-783. bacchic tetrameters.
	784. . . . iambic dimeter catalectic.
	785-790. bacchic tetrameters (some of them imperfect).
	791-832. trochaic septenarii.
	833-834. iambic octonarii.
	835. . . . cretic tetrameter acatalectic.
	836. . . . (?)
	837. . . . iambic septenarius.

838-839. . . . .	trochaic septenarii.	922-927. . . . .	bacchic tetrameters
840. . . . .	(?)		acatalectic.
841-908. . . . .	trochaic septenarii.	928-929. . . . .	trochaic octonarii.
• 909-921. . . . .	iambic octonarii.	930-1036 . . . .	trochaic septenarii.

VI.

DIFFERENCES IN THE MANNER OF RENDERING VARIOUS RHYTHMS; MUSICAL ACCOMPANIMENT, ETC.

69. A change in the character of the verse was often accompanied also by a corresponding change in the manner of presenting the scene. With reference to the differences in the manner of presentation, the various parts of a play are to be divided into three distinct classes:—

70. (1) Those composed of ordinary narrative, or dialogue, written in iambic senarii, without musical accompaniment.

(2) Those merely recited to the accompaniment of the flute, written in trochaic or iambic septenarii and in iambic octonarii.

(3) Those of a purely lyric nature, sung to a set tune with flute accompaniment, written in varying metres—including those under (2),—but commonly characterized by the presence of trochaic octonarii.<sup>1</sup>

71. In the text editions of antiquity, letters were added to the superscriptions of different scenes to indicate the manner in which they were to be rendered, and these marks are still distinguishable in some of the manuscripts of Plautus. These show that the last two kinds of scenes, (2) and (3) above, as they were both accompanied by music,

---

<sup>1</sup> The rules governing the change of verse in these parts have not yet been discovered. K. Meissner, in Fleckeisen's Jahrbücher für Philologie und Pädagogik (1884), attempts to show that they are divided into strophes. See also Schlee, de vers. in cant. Ter. cons. (Berlin, 1879).

were marked with the letter C., i.e. canticum; the first kind (1), with the letters DV., i.e. diuerbium, spoken dialogue, without musical accompaniment. In the editions of Terence, as may be seen from Donatus, scenes of a purely lyric character were marked M.M.C. (perhaps an abbreviation for modi mutati cantici); those merely recited with musical accompaniment, simply C. (though this rests upon the opinion of Ritschl, Donatus giving us no information on this point); those consisting of ordinary dialogue, DV.<sup>1</sup>

72. Sometimes there was music also before the beginning of the play (before the prologue) and between the acts. The music for the plays of Plautus and Terence seems to have been composed entirely by slaves. The music was given by a single flute-player (tibicen), probably by the composer himself, with a double flute, or, perhaps we might say, clarinet, as the instrument bore a greater resemblance to it than to our flute. It was played by blowing into both tubes at the same time. From the didascaliae we learn of four different kinds of these instruments: tibiae pares, in which the two pipes were of equal length; tibiae impares, in which they were of unequal length; tibiae serranae, of which but little is known, though they were probably of equal length;<sup>2</sup> and duae dextrae tibiae, in which the two tubes were of equal length and identical in key and note.

Regarding the last-mentioned tibiae, we are told by Varro that the right tube was for leading (tibia incentiua), the left for accompanying (tibia succentiua). We have no further knowledge regarding the difference between the various kinds of these instruments; but we may be certain that the choice of instrument depended upon the character of the play. In the case of the Heauton timorumenos, we know from the didascalía that instruments were changed in the course of the play itself.

---

<sup>1</sup> Indications of this system of marking are preserved in the Phormio of Terence, before Act II. Scene 4; see Rh. Mus. XXIX. 54.

<sup>2</sup> On the character of the music used in the plays, see Howard on the Αὐλός, or Tibia, in the Harvard Studies in Classical Philology, IV. (1893).

73. An important difference between the practices of the ancient and of the modern stage may be inferred from Livy, 7. 2, 8 ff. It is here recorded that, from the time of Livius Andronicus, throughout the whole period when Roman comedy was at its height, the lyrical parts were sung by a person especially selected for the purpose and stationed near the flute-player, while the actors meanwhile were wont merely to act silently, in a manner suitable to the words thus sung.

VII.

PROSODY.

The prosody and the language of Plautus differ far more from those of the later classical authors, than do those of Terence, though there were only a few years between the two writers. Peculiarities of this nature will be pointed out in detail in the notes. The more important of these, however, may well find a place in this introduction.

1. PECULIARITIES OF INDIVIDUAL SYLLABLES AND COMBINATIONS.

74. Initial h is capable of preventing the elision of a preceding final syllable ending in a vowel or m, and of making a long syllable after a preceding final consonant.<sup>1</sup>

75. L or r, added to a mute, does not make a long syllable, e.g. pātrēm (never pātrem). Later, such syllables might be pronounced long (i.e. pat-rem) or short (i.e. pa-trem).

---

<sup>1</sup> See Birt in Rhein. Mus. for 1899, pp. 40 ff.

76. The final s of words ending in īs and ūs did not necessarily make a long syllable before a following consonant. Before a vowel it was probably sometimes elided, just as final m was (see notes on verses 466, 532, 691, and App. thereon). As late as the boyhood of Cicero, final s was often very faintly pronounced, e.g. satī(s) uerborum in 125 (instead of satīs uerborum), magī(s) noscas in 290 (instead of magīs noscas).

77. Final ē in the following words might apparently be treated as a silent letter:<sup>1</sup> ille, inde, quippe, unde, nempe, and probably some others occasionally; e.g. esse, and imperatives like mitte, dice; cf. —

Men. 57, Ēpīdāmnīēn|sīs ūll(e) quēm dū dūm dīxērām

Poen. 2, Ind(e) mī prīncipī|ūm cāpī(am) ēx ēā | trāgōēdīā

Mil. 922, Nēmp(e) tū nōuī stī mīlītēm, | mē(um) ērūm? — Rōgā|rē mīrūmst.

In the interrogative particle -ne this final ē was not merely often silent, but it was often omitted even in writing; e.g. certon (for certone) in 643, uīden (for uīdesne). The disappearance of final e is further illustrated in hic for hice, horunc for horunce, dic for dice, etc.

78. The dissyllabic vowel combinations ea, eha, ei, ehi, eo, eu, ia, ie, ii, ihi, io, iu, oi, ohi, ui, ua, ue, uo, are often slurred together into a single syllable by synizesis, e.g. ēadem, ēam, mēā, mēi, ēi, rēi, ēodem, mēos, ēum, gratīam, diē, dīu, otīo, prōinde, fūisse, duēllum, duās.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> It has been customary to explain the metrical phenomena connected with these words by supposing the first syllable to be treated as short, e.g. illē, indē, etc.; but see Skutsch, Studien zur Plautinischen Prosodie (Leipzig, 1892), pp. 30ff. Skutsch, however, was in part anticipated in his theory by Wase, Weise, Bothe, and Ritschl.

<sup>2</sup> In the case of ia, ie, ii, io, iu and ui, ua, ue, uo, the pronunciation above referred to was facilitated by the fact that i and u before a vowel had a tendency to take on a consonantal character.

79. A similar phenomenon, apparently, is found in the monosyllabic use of the words eius, huius, quoniam (eius, huius, quoniam); cf. 39, 106, 107, 289, 641.

80. The forms of aio are freely handled, and present the following peculiarities: ait (592), ait (365), ain (Am. 284), aibat (561), aiebatis (676), ais (613).

81. In certain words, a u that was, in later times, consonantal appears as a vowel; e.g. reliquos is regularly tetrasyllabic in Plautus and Terence (i.e. relicūōs), larua is regularly trisyllabic (i.e. larūā); cf. solūō, silūā, etc., in later poets.

82. The following vowels and syllables, commonly short in classical poetry, are sometimes long in Plautus:—

- (a) a in the nominative singular of masculine proper names of the first declension; e.g. Am. 439, Sosiā.
- (b) Final e of the infinitive; e.g. Truc. 425, darē; Mil. 848, promerē.
- (c) Final e in the ablative of the third declension, e.g. 914, carnē; Ps. 616, militē.
- (d) Final o in modo (the adverb), e.g. 458, As. 5, 869, 876, etc.; and in ego.
- (e) -at, -et, -it in the third person singular present of verbs of the first, second, and fourth conjugations<sup>1</sup> and -it of the perfect (all originally long); e.g. 11, negāt; 196, decēt; 350, scīt; 9, uendidīt; 34, emīt; Am. 643, uicīt; Mil. 214, astitīt; Ps. 311. Similarly, in the final syllable of subjunctive forms and of the imperfect indicative, the vowel was originally long.
- (f) -ar, -or in the first person passive of verbs; e.g. Am. 559, loquār; Capt. 1023, regrediōr; and -or in the nominative singular of nouns and adjectives (comparative degree), e.g. sorōr, uxōr; longiōr, stultiōr.

---

<sup>1</sup> Final -it in the 3d conjugation is rare and probably due to analogy; erīt and similar futures occasionally occur.

- (g) -bus in the dative plural of nouns and adjectives; e.g. Merc. 901, aedibūs; Rud. 975, omnibūs.
- (h) es(s), second person singular of sum (always long in Plautus and Terence); e.g. 333, 412, 427, etc.
- (i) fi- in fierent and fieri for the classical fierent, fieri; e.g. 998, 843.
- (j) u- in fūi, fūimus, fūerim, plūerat, etc.; e.g. 262, 555, 633, etc.

83. Occasionally a syllable which in later poets is regularly long is short in Plautus; e.g. frustrā, nēutiquam (n(e) utiquam), hīc, illic, istīc (the last three, as nominative singular masculine, having the -ic always short in Plautus).

It seems probable that illic was sometimes pronounced illc; see note on 751, and Skutsch's Studien zur Plautin. Prosodie, pp. 113 ff.

2. INFLUENCE OF VERSE-ACCENT AND WORD-ACCENT.

84. The most important and far-reaching peculiarity of prosody to be noted in the dramatic poets is the frequent shortening of a long syllable when it is immediately preceded by a short syllable and immediately preceded, or followed, by the verse-ictus,<sup>1</sup> or the word-accent. The influence of this "iambic law" (so called because it concerns the combination ∪ —) may, then, change —

- (1) ∪ — ∟ to ∪ ∪ ∟, e.g. pŭēr cāŭsa to pŭēr cāŭsa; ēt ād pōrtitores to ēt ād pōrtitores;
- (2) ∪ — ∪ to ∪ ∪ ∪, e.g. ōb hānc īnīmicitias to ōb hānc īnīmicitias;
- (3) ∪ — to ∪ ∪, e.g. āg(e) ērgō to āg(e) ērgō.

---

<sup>1</sup> The term ictus is used in this volume in the sense of stress. For another view regarding the nature of ictus, see Bennett, Am. Jour. Phil., Vol. XIX, No. 4.

It is important to note, however, that in such cases the long syllable may be shortened only when the short syllable immediately preceeding begins a word. The shortening, furthermore, seems to take place only in the following cases:—

(1) In a dissyllabic iambic word.<sup>1</sup>

(2) In a monosyllabic word (or one that has become such by elision) preceded by a short monosyllable (or a word which has become such by elision).

(3) In the first syllable of a word of two or more syllables preceded by a short monosyllable (or a word that has become such by elision);

(4) In the second syllable of a polysyllabic word beginning with a short syllable.

In the cases under (3) and (4), the rule holds (possibly with rare exceptions) only for syllables "long by position," but having a short vowel.

Another effect of the metrical accent is frequently seen in cases where monosyllabic words ending in a long vowel, or in m, instead of being elided before a following vowel, or h, receive the ictus and are treated as short syllables; see Introd. § 37 (e).

3. HIATUS.

85. Hiatus, while comparatively rare in Terence and later writers, is very common in Plautus, as it is in the Saturnian metre and the earliest Latin generally. It is found after both long and short vowels and after m; e.g. Capt. 196, 476, 534, 862, 950; 24, 31, 372, 373, 395, 665, 709, 1024. It occurs either after the thesis, or within the thesis, or after the arsis, or between separate feet. The following occurrences may here be noted:<sup>1</sup>—

---

<sup>1</sup> Here the word-accent on the initial syllable aided in the shortening of the final syllable. Compare the shortening of the originally long final syllable in mihi, tibi, sibi, ibi, ubi, nisi, quasi, ego, modo, etc.

(a) In the diaeresis of a tetrameter, e.g.

780, spērôquē m(e) ōb | hūnc nūntiūm aētērn(um) ādēp|tūrūm cibūm.

331, eūm sī rēdūlis | mīhī prāētērēā ūnūm nūmmūm nē dūis.

(b) In the caesura of an iambic senarius, e.g.

709, sēd mālēn(e) īd fāc|tūm ārbītrā,rē? — Pēssūmē.

(c) At the end of the fourth foot of an iambic senarius, e.g.
suēs moriuntur āngina | acērrume.

(d) In the fifth foot of an iambic senarius, e.g.

93, ūtā nūnc belligē,rānt Áetōlī | cūm Álēs.

(e) Elsewhere when there is a decided pause in the sense, e.g.

139, Nē flē. Er. Ēgōn(e) īl,lūm nōn flēam? Ēgōn | nōn dēflēām.

It occurs further, at points in the verse not covered by the enumeration thus far made.

(f) Before or after interjections (especially monosyllabic interjections).

(g) After pyrrhic or iambic dissyllables, e.g.

950, Ůtī ēstīs, uōs? | ū(e) āctūtūm, | Týndār(um) hūc ār|cēssītē.

(h) In accented monosyllables, a final m was sometimes not elided before a following vowel, and a final diphthong or long vowel was merely shortened, instead of being altogether elided (see under “semi-hiatus,” § 37 (e)). As the syllable involved always has the ictus, it is probable that the phenomenon is due to this fact.

841, Iām Ēg(o) ēx cōrpō|r(e) ēxīg(am) ōmnīs | mācūlās māērō|rūm tībī.

705, Quā uēra ōbēs|sēnt ūlī quōī δ|pērām dābūm.

807, Tūm pīstōrēs | scrōfīpāsci, | quī ālūnt fūrūrī|būs suēs.

<sup>1</sup> Cases formed by initial h after a final vowel or m, as Birt has shown, should probably not be regarded as instances of hiatus (see § 74).

VIII.

LANGUAGE.

Peculiarities of usage not mentioned here will be taken up in the notes.

1. PECULIARITIES OF FORM.

In addition to the forms here given, the classical forms are, in many cases, also common. Where only the classical form occurs, no notice is here taken of it. It must not be understood that none of the forms indicated below occur outside of Plautus.

86. General.

- (a) -uos,<sup>1</sup> -uom, -uont,<sup>1</sup> -uontur, for the later -uus, -uum, -uunt, -uuntur, e.g. seruos, tuos, as forms of the nom. sing., metuont, for the later seruus, tuus, metuunt.
-quos, -quom, -quont, -quontur, for the later -cus, -cum, -cunt, -cuntur (and, still later, -quus, -quum, -quunt, -quuntur), e.g. equos, relinquont, for the later ecus, relincunt (and, still later, equus, relinquunt).<sup>2</sup>
- (b) quouis, quoi, quor, quom for the later cuius, cui, cur cum.<sup>3</sup>
- (c) ũ, for later ĩ, in unaccented syllables before labials, e.g. lubido, optumus, pessumus, etc., for libido, optimus, pessimus, etc.,<sup>4</sup> also lubet (later libet).
- (d) Ei for later ĩ; e.g. deico for dico, though this ei has been generally changed in our Mss. to conform to the later spelling.

<sup>1</sup> It will be noticed that in this edition the same character is used for both vowel and consonantal u; -uos, -uom, etc., will therefore be understood as representing -vos, -vom, etc., as well as dissyllabic -ũos, -ũom.

<sup>2</sup> See, for instance, Appendix to Bennett's Latin Grammar, § 57, 1.

<sup>3</sup> See B. App. 197, 3.

<sup>4</sup> See B. App. 6, 2.

- (e) The suffix -clum for the later -culum; e.g. periculum, saeculum, uinclum, etc., for periculum, saeculum, etc.
- (f) Gnatus and gnata, instead of natus, nata, chiefly as substantives.
- (g) Probably both t and d were used at the end of certain pronouns and particles; e.g. aput, aliut, illut, etc., as well as apud, aliud, illud. The pronunciation in either case was probably the same, viz. that of t.

87. Pronouns.

(a) Hic.

SINGULAR.			PLURAL.
Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
Nom. hici(ne) <sup>1</sup>	haeci(ne) <sup>1</sup>	hoci(ne) <sup>1</sup>	hisce (heisce) <sup>2</sup>	haec, <sup>3</sup> haeci(ne) <sup>1</sup>	haeci(ne)
Gen.			horunc	harunc	horunc
Dat.			{ hibus hisce <sup>2</sup>
Acc. hunci(ne)	hanci(ne)	hoci(ne)	hosce <sup>2</sup>	hasce <sup>2</sup>
Abl. hoci(ne)		hoci(ne)	hisce <sup>2</sup>

(b) Ille.

SINGULAR.			PLURAL.
Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
Nom. illic, illici(ne)	illaec	illuc	illisce <sup>4</sup>	illaec	illaec
Gen.
Dat. illic	illae
Acc. illunc	illanc	illuc			illaec
Abl. illoc, illoce	illac		illisce <sup>4</sup>	illisce

<sup>1</sup> The forms in -ne are of course interrogative forms, the original -ce weakening to -ci before the enclitic.

<sup>2</sup> The full forms in -ce are as a rule used only before vowels and h.

<sup>3</sup> Haec is the regular plural feminine form in Plautus before vowels and h.

<sup>4</sup> The full forms in -ce are, as a rule, used only before vowels.

(c) Iste.<sup>1</sup>

SINGULAR.			PLURAL.
	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem. Neut.
Nom.	istic	istaec	istuc, istoc istuci(ne) <sup>2</sup>	istaec	istaec
Gen.	isti (in isti modi )
Dat.	istic	istic, istae
Acc.	istunc	istanc	istuc	istosci(n) <sup>2</sup>	istaec
Abl.	istoc	istac	istoc	istisce
		istaci(ne) <sup>2</sup>	istoci(ne) <sup>2</sup>

(d) Is.

Eae (?) in the dative singular feminine ; i in the nominative plural masculine ; ibus in the dative and ablative plural.

(e) Ipsē.

Ipsus and ipsissimus in the nominative singular masculine.

(f) Aliquis.

Aliqui in ablative singular, masculine and neuter.

(g) Alter.

	SINGULAR.
	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
Nom.		altra (?)
Gen.	altrius (?)
Dat.	altri (?)	alterae
Acc.			altrum (?)

<sup>1</sup> For the declension of this word in Plautus, see Studemund in Fleckeisen's Jahrbuecher, 1876, p. 57.

<sup>2</sup> The full forms in -ce (with the e weakened to i) occur in istucine, istocine, istacine, istoscin.

(h) Qui, Quis.

	SINGULAR.			PLURAL.
	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
Nom.
Gen.	quius	quius	quius
Dat.	quoi	quoi	quoi
Acc.
Abl.	qui	qui			qui	qui

Quius (interrogative and relative possessive, whose) was sometimes treated as a nominative : —

	SINGULAR.			PLURAL.
	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.	Masc.	Fem.	Neut.
Nom.	quius	quoia			quoiae
Gen.				quium(?)
Dat.
Acc.		quiam
Abl.		quoia

88. Verbs.

- (a) siem, sies, siet, sient, and fuam, fuas, fuat, fuant, instead of sim, sis, sit, sint; creduam, creduas (creduis), creduat (creduit), for credam, credas, etc.; duim, duis, duit, duint (with its compounds perduim, etc.), for dem, des, det, dent (though from another root); edim, edis, edit, edimus, editis, edint, for edam, edas, edat, edamus, edutis, edant.
- (b) potis (sometimes pote) sum, potis es, potis est, for possum, potes, potest.
- (c) scibam, audibam, etc., for sciebam, audiebam, etc.
- (d) scibo, audibo, etc., for the regular future, sciam, audiam, etc.
- (e) dice, duce, face, for dic, duc, fac.
- (f) Passive infinitive in -arier, -erier, -ier, etc., for -ari, -eri, -i, etc.

- (g) dixti, scriptsti, misti, etc., for dixisti, scripsisti, misisti; dixe, adduxe, detraxe, etc., for dixisse, adduxisse, detraxisse, etc.
- (h) amasso, seruasso, capso, etc., for amauero, seruauero, cepero, etc.; duxim, iussim, locassim, etc., for duxerim, iusserim, locauerim, etc.; faxem for fecissem.
- (i) potior has forms of the third conjugation; e.g. potitur for potitur.
- (j) mauolo, mauolunt, mauolet, mauelim, etc., for malo, malunt, malet, malim, etc.; neuolo, neuis, neuolt, etc., for nolo, non uis, non uolt, etc.

89. Active forms, found in Plautus, of verbs commonly deponent: aggredio, amplecto, arbitro, assentio, aucupo, auguro, auspico, circumplecto, contemplo, cuncto, faenero, lucto, luafico, munero, nutrico, opino, secto, tuto, tumultuo, uago, uenero.

2. PECULIARITIES OF SYNTAX.

Substantives.

90. Genitive:—

- (a) Is invariably the case used with similis.
- (b) With onustus: Aul. 611, aulam onustam auri.
- (c) With exilis: Stich. 526, exilem aegritudinum; with sanus: Trin. 454, sanus mentis; with falsiloquos: Capt. 264, quarum rerum te falsiloquom mihi esse nolo.
- (d) With saturare: Stich. 18, haec res uitae me, soror, saturant.
- (e) With credere: As. 459, quoi omnium rerum credit; with desipio: Epid. 138, desipiebam mentis; with perdere: As. 132, capitis te perdam; with prendere: Bacch. 696, quem mendaci prendit.
- (f) With cupio, to be desirous of, fond of: Mil. 964, quae cupiunt tui; with fastidio: Aul. 245, fastidit mei.
- (g) Appositional genitive in colloquial uses: Mil. 1434, scelus uiri (cf. "he's a devil of a fellow").

91. Dative:—

- (a) With studiosus: Mil. 801, nisi adulterio studiosus rei nulli aliae.
- (b) With decet: Amph. 820, nostro generi non decet.
- (c) Depending upon a substantive, where one might expect the genitive: Mil. 1431, Philocomasio amator (cf. "servant to the king").
- (d) With curare: Trin. 1057, rebus publicis curare.

92. Accusative:—

- (a) With verbal substantives; e.g. Aul. 423, quid tibi nos tactiost, what right have you to touch us? literally, why is there unto you a touching us? This is found, however, only with quid?
- (b) With utor, abutor, fruniscor, fungor, potior (e.g. Rud. 190), instead of the ablative.
- (c) With in before names of towns, to indicate motion to which: Trin. 112; Pseud. 1098.
- (d) Occasionally with names of countries, without a preposition to indicate motion to: Capt. 573.

93. Ablative:—

- (a) With aeque and adaeque: Amph. 293, hoc metuculosus aequae; Most. 30.
- (b) With ex before names of towns, to indicate motion from: Trin. 771; ib. 845.
- (c) Occasionally with names of countries, without a preposition, to indicate place where: Capt. 330.

Verbs.*94. Moods:—

- (a) Indicative: 1. In indirect questions.
- 2. In relative clauses of indirect discourse.
- 3. In a quom (cum)-clause, even when the clause is causal or adversative.

4. For subjunctive in deliberative questions: quid ago? what shall I do? (instead of quid agam?) Cf. the English expression, "What do I do now (next)?"

- (b) Subjunctive: 1. Absque with the ablative and esset (foret), to represent a condition contrary to fact: Men. 1022, absque te esset, were it not for you.

2. Ne with the perfect subjunctive in prohibitions is common in Plautus, though very rare later (except in Cicero's Letters). It is energetic and uncereemonious, and therefore colloquial.

95. Tenses:—

- (a) Present: 1. The present indicative is often loosely used where strict accuracy would require the future or the future perfect: Stich. 623, deos salutabo modo: poste ad te continuo transeo; Pers. 275, etiam respicis (won't you look around?); Capt. 331, eum si reddis mihi, praeterea unum nummum ne duis (for si reddideris, etc.).

2. The present subjunctive, instead of the imperfect, is sometimes used in conditional sentences, where the condition is apparently contrary to fact: As. 393, si sit domi, dicam tibi.

- (b) Future perfect: The future perfect is frequently used, not as a true future perfect to indicate an act to be finished prior to some future time, but as an energetic future to indicate prompt completion of the act at a future time: Bacch. 211, abiero, I'll be off; Trin. 1007, lubet obseruare quid agat: huc concessero. Here the force of the tense in huc concessero should be brought out in translation by using an expression that connotes the idea of hurried accomplishment, e.g. I'll step this way, I'll dodge in here, or the like. The simple future might always be used in such a case, but there is a very distinct difference in tone between the two tenses.

- (c) Pluperfect: The pluperfect indicative is sometimes used where the perfect would seem more natural to the English idiom, Capt. 194, ad fratrem, quo ire dixeram, mox iuero. The tense was, however, felt by the Romans as a true pluperfect referring to time prior to a more or less clearly defined point in the past. Similar uses are not wanting in English. One often hears a person say, in reply to a suggestion just made by some one to whom he is talking, "I hadn't thought of that," i.e. "had not a moment ago, before you called my attention to it." It would on such occasions always be equally appropriate to say, "I did not think of that." The choice of tense depends solely upon the point of view.

96. Participles: The perfect passive participle is used in the ablative with opus est and usus est, e.g. Cas. 502, uicino conventost opus, there is need of meeting the neighbor; literally, there is need of the neighbor met.

3. MISCELLANEOUS PECULIARITIES.

97. (a) Ad in the sense of apud: Capt. 699, ad patrem, at his father's.
 (b) Prae used as an adverb: Am. 543, abi prae, go ahead.
 (c) Clam used as a preposition: Merc. 545, clam uxorem, without the knowledge of his wife.
 (d) Quoniam, meaning when, instead of since: Trin. 149, quoniam est profectus peregre Charmides, when Charmides set out for foreign parts.
 (e) Vt (instead of utinam), introducing a wish: Poen. 912, bene ut tibi sit.
 (f) Quo, introducing a purpose clause containing no comparative.

- (g) Double negative: Epid. 664, neque ille haud obiciet mihi.
- (h) Nec, used for non: Bacch. 119, tu dis nec recte dicis.

98. -Ne introducing a question which expects an affirmative answer. The -ne is, however, non-committal in such cases, and does not in itself suggest the answer. This use produces a certain rhetorical effect, the implication being that the answer may safely be left to be inferred. Cf. "Do I, or do I not, look like an honest man?" The use of nonne in early Latin is at best extremely rare.

4. ORDER OF WORDS.

99. Generally speaking, the most emphatic points in a Latin sentence or verse are the beginning (except for the subject of an independent sentence) and the end (except for the verb). Emphatic ideas tend to find utterance first, but special effects are often produced by saving an emphatic word or phrase till the end of the clause, for the mind to dwell upon. An unusual arrangement of words (e.g. reversed order, wide separation of words belonging together, juxtaposition of those contrasted, etc.) attracts special attention to such as are out of their normal position, and thus makes them emphatic. A shifting of words in the middle of a sentence is less noticeable, and so produces less emphasis. Freedom of position is limited, for purposes of emphasis, only by the necessity of avoiding obscurity or an overburdening of the mind. For the normal order of words in a Latin sentence, see A. & G. 343; B. 348-350; G.-L. 674; H. 560 f. In a short sentence, e.g. Cæsar interfectus est, the verb may have to stand first, in order to make an emphatic place for the subject at the end, in which case the verb is not necessarily emphatic. Similarly the subject may come last, in order to make an emphatic place for the verb at the beginning, in which case the subject is not necessarily emphatic. In such sentences the context commonly shows which part is intended to be emphasized.

IX.

THE PLOT OF THE CAPTIVE.

100. Hegio, a wealthy citizen of Calydon in Aetolia, has had two sons. One of these was stolen at the age of four years, by a faithless slave, and has been given up as irrevocably lost. The other son, Philopolemus, has, shortly before the time at which the play is supposed to begin, been taken captive by the Eleans, who are at war with the Aetolians. In the hope of recovering this captive son, Hegio has begun to traffic in Eleans that had been captured by the Aetolians, with a view to getting some one whom he can exchange for his son. Among the captives thus purchased are a noble Elean by the name of Philocrates and his slave Tyndarus. These are the two captives referred to in the title of the play. They have conceived the plan of exchanging names and clothing in order to mislead Hegio. Accordingly Philocrates, in the presence of Hegio, acts the part of the slave, Tyndarus the part of the master. It is arranged that Hegio shall send the supposed slave back to Elis to arrange an exchange between his master and Philopolemus. After Philocrates has thus gained his freedom, the identity of Tyndarus is betrayed to Hegio by Aristophontes, another captive, who happened to have known both Philocrates and Tyndarus in Elis. Hegio is slow to realize that he has been made the victim of a trick, but, when it finally dawns upon him, his indignation knows no bounds. Tyndarus is put at hard labor in the stone quarries. In good time, however, Philocrates returns, bringing with him not merely Philopolemus but also Stalagmus, the runaway slave that had stolen Hegio's other son. It is now learned that Stalagmus sold the child to the father of this very Philocrates, and that Tyndarus, now in the stone quarries, is none other than Hegio's long-lost son. Hegio is thus reunited to both of his sons, and his happiness is marred only by the regret that he has unwittingly caused one of them so much suffering.

T. MACCI PLAVTI

C A P T I V I

ARGVMENTVM.

Captúst in pugna Hégionis fílius,
Aliúm quadrimum fúgiens seruos uéndidit.
Patér captiuos cómmercatur Áleos
Tantum studens ut natum recuperet,
Et ínibi | emit ólim amissum fílium.
Is suó cum domino uéste uersa ac nómine
Vt ámittatur fécit : ipsus pléctitur.
Et ís reduxit cáptum et fugitiuóm simul,
Indício quoius álium agnoscit fílium.

5

---

PERSONAE.

ERGASILUS, a parasite ; always hungry.

HEGIO, a rich old gentleman of Aetolia.

LORARII, chastisers, slaves of Hegio.

PHILOCRATES,	} prisoners of war captured from the
TYNDARUS, slave of Philocrates,		} Eleans by the Aetolians and
ARISTOPHONTES,		} afterward purchased by Hegio.

PUER, a slave of Hegio.

PHILOPOLEMUS, son of Hegio, captured by the Eleans.

STALAGMUS, runaway slave of Hegio, who stole the latter's little son and sold him in Elis.

T. MACCI PLAVTI CAPTIVI.

SCENE : a street in Calydon, a city in Aetolia, leading, as usual, on the spectators' right, to the interior of the city, and on their left, to the harbor and foreign lands. Hegio's house stands in the background. This scene remains unchanged throughout the play.

PROLOGVS.

[Philocrates and Tyndarus, the former dressed as slave, the latter as master, are seen, heavily chained, in front of Hegio's house. The prologue enters to explain to the audience the general situation and the character of the play.]

Hos quós uidetis stáre hic captiuós duos,

Illí qui | astant, — hí stant ambo, nón sedent:

Hoc uós mihi testes éstis me uerúm loqui.

Senéx qui hic habitat, Hégio, est huiús [pointing to Tyndarus] pater.

5 Sed ís quo pacto séruiat suo síbi patri, 5

Id ego híc apud uos próloquar, si operám datis.

Seni huíc fuerunt filii natí duo:

Alt(e)rúm quadrimum púerum seruos súrpuít

Eumque hínc profugiens uéndidít in Álide

10 Patrí huiusce [pointing to Philocrates]. iam hóc tenetis ?

óptumumst. 10

Negat hércle ille ultumus.† accedito.

Si nón ubi sed eas lócus est, est ubi ámbules,

Quando hístrionem cógis mendicárier.

Ego mé tua causa, ne érres, non ruptúrus sum.

15 Vos quí potestis ópe uostra censérier 15

Accípite relicuom : álieno uti níl moror.

Fugitíuos ille, ut díxeram ante, huiús [pointing to Philocrates] patri, Domō quém profugiens dóminum abstulerat, uéndidit.

Is póstquam hunc [pointing to Tyndarus] emit, dédit eum huic gnató suo [pointing to Philocrates]

20 Pecúliarem, quía quasi una aetás erat. 20

Hic [pointing to Tyndarus] núnc domī seruit suó patri nec scít pater :

Ením uéro di nos quási pilas hominés habent.

Ratiónem habetis quómodo unum amíserit.

Postquám belligerant Aétoli cum | Áleis,

25 Vt fít in bello, cápitur alter filius. 25

Medicús Menarchus émit ibidem in Álide.

Coepít captiuos cómmercari hic Áleos,

Si quém reperire pósset, qui mutét suom

(Illúm captiuom : hunc súom ésse nescit quí domist) ;

30 Et quóniam heri indaudíuit de summó loco 30

Summóque genere cáptum esse equitem | Áleum,

Nil prétio parsit filio dum párceret.

Recónciliare ut fácilius possét domum

Emít hosce e praeda ámbos de quaeatóribus.

35 Hisce aútem inter sese hunc confinxerúnt dolum, 35

Quo pácto hic seruos súom erum hinc amittát domum :

Itaque ínter se commútant uestem et nómina :

Illíc [pointing to Tyndarus] uocatur Philócrates, hic [pointing to Philocrates] Týndarus.

Huius íllíc, hic illius hódie fert imáginem.

40 Et hic [pointing to Tyndarus] hódie expediet hánc docte falláciam 40

Et súom erum faciet líbertatis cómpotem ;
Eodémque pacto frátrem seruabít suom,
Reducémque faciet líberum in patriam ád patrem
Inprúdens, itidem ut saépe iam in multís locis

45 Plus ínsciens quis fécit quam prudéns boni. 45

Sed ínscientes suá sibi fallácia
Ita cómpararunt ét confinxerúnt dolum
Itaque hí commenti dé sua senténtia, Vt in séruitute hic [pointing to Tyndarus] ád suom ma-neát patrem.

50 Ita núnc ignorans suó sibi seruít. patri. 50

Homúnculi quantí sunt, quom recógito!
Haec rés agetur nóbis, uobis fábula.
Sed étiamst paucis uós quod monitos uóluerim.
Profécto expediet fábulae huic operám dare.

55 Non pértractate fáctast neque item ut céterae, 55

Neque spúrcidici insunt uórsus, immemorábiles.
Hic néque periurus lénost nec meretríx mala
Neque míles gloriósus. ne uereámini,
Quia béllum Aetolis ésse dixi cum Áleis :

60 Forís illic extra scaénam fient proélia. 60

Nam hoc paéne iniquomst, cómico chorágio
Conári desubito ágere nos tragoédiam.
Proin síquis pugnam expéctat, litis cóntrahat :
Valéntiorem náctus aduorsárium

65 Si erít, ego faciam ut púgnam inspectet nón bonam, 65

Adeo út spectare póstea omnis óderit.
Abeó. ualete, iúdices iustíssumi,
Domí duellique duéllatores óptumi. [Exit.]

ACT I.

SCENE 1.

The parasite introduces himself, commiserates Hegio upon the latter's misfortune in losing his son, and speculates about the effect it will have upon his own prospects. — The whole of the first act is written in iambic senarii. For the appropriateness of this verse in introducing the audience to the general situation, see Introd. 42.

ERGASILVS.

[Ergasilus enters from the right, hungry, as usual.]

Er. Iuuentus nomen indidit Scortó mihi,

Eo quía ínuocatus sóleo esse in conuúio. 70

Scio ábsúrde dictum hoc dérisiones dícere,

At ego áio recte : nám scortum in conuúio

5 Sibi amátor talos quóm iacit — scortum ínuocat.

Estne ínuocatum an nón? † planissime.

Verum hércle uero nós parasiti plánius, 75

Quos númquam quisquam néque uocat neque ínuocat.

Quasi múres semper édimus alienúm cibum.

10 Vbi rés prolatae súnt, quom rus hominés eunt,

Simúl prolatae rés sunt nostris déntibus.

Quasi quóm caletur cócleae in occultó latent, 80

Suó sibi suco úuont, ros si nón cadit,

Itém parasiti rébus prolátis latent

15 In ócúltó miseri, uíctitant sucó suo,

Dum rúri rurant hómínes quos ligúrriant.

Prolátis rebus párasiti uenátici 85

Sumús : quando res rédierunt, molóssici

Odiósicique et múltum incommodéstici.

- 20 Et híc quidem hercle, nísi qui colaphos pérpeti
Potést parasitus frángique aulas ín caput,
Vel íre éxtra portam trígeminam ad saccúm licet. 90
Quod míhi ne eueniat nón nullum pérículumst.
Nam póstquam meus rex ést potitus hóstium —
25 Ita núnc belligerant Aétoli cum | Áleis :
Nam Aetólia haec est, íllic [pointing to the left exit] est
captus in Álide Philopólemus huius [pointing to the house in the back- ground] Hégionis fílius, 95
Senís qui hic habitat, quae aédes lamentáariae
Mihi súnt, quas quotiensquómque conspició, fleo —,
30 Nunc híc occepit quaéstum hunc fili grátia
Inhonéstum, maxume álienum ingenió suo :
Hominés captiuos cómmercatur, sí queat 100
Aliquem ínuenire suóm qui mutet fílium.
Quod quídem ego nimís quam cúpio † ut ímpetret :
35 Nam ni íllum recipit, níl est quo me récipiam.
† Nullast spes iuuéntútis : sese omnis amant.
Ille démum antiquis ést adulescens móribus, 105
Quoius númquam uoltum tránquillauí grátiis.
Condígne pater est eiús moratus móribus.
40 Nunc ád eum pergam. séd aperitur óstium,
Vnde sáturitate saépe ego exii ébrius.

SCENE 2.

Hegio, overwhelmed though he is with trouble, still thinks of the comfort of others. For his own sufferings, he receives an abundance of sympathy from Ergasilus, who thus secures an invitation to dinner. — For the metre, see Introd. 42.

HEGIO. LORARIUS. ERGASILUS.

[Hegio comes out of his house with an overseer of slaves. Ergasilus remains unobserved at first.]

- He.* Aduórte animum sis: tu ístos captiuós duos 110
Herī quós emi de praéda de quaestóribus —
His índito caténas singulárias
Ístás; maiores quíbus sunt iuncti démito.
5 Sinito ámbulare, sí foris si intús uolent:
Sed uti ádseruentur mágna diligéntia. 115
Libér captiuos áuis ferae consímilis est:
Semél fugiendi sí datast occásio,
Satis ést — numquam postílla possis préndere.
10 Lo. Omnés profecto líberi lubéntius
Sumūs quám seruimus.
He. Nón uidere ita tú quidem. 120
Lo. Si nón est quod dem, méne uis dem ipse — ín pedes?
He. Si déderis, erit extémplo mihi quod dém tibi.
Lo. Auís mé ferae consímilem faciam, ut praédicas.
15 He. Ita üt dícis: nam si fáxis, te in caueám dabo.
Sed sátís uerborumst: cúra quae iussi átque abi [exit
the lorarius into house]. 125
Ego íbo ad fratrem ad álios captiuós meos:
Visám ne nocte hac quíppiam turbáuérint.
Inde mé continuo [starts to go] récipiam rursúm
domum.

20 Er. [To himself, but purposely loud enough to attract attention] Aegrést mi hunc facere quaéstum carcérarium

Proptér sui gnati míseriam miserúm senem. 130

Sed si úllo pacto ille húc conciliarí potest,
Vel cárnuficinam hunc fácere possum pérpeti.

He. Quis hñc lóquitur?

Er. Ego, qui tuó maerore máceror,

25 Macéscó, consenésco et tabescó miser.

Ossa átque pellis súm misera macritúdine, 135

Neque úmquam quicquam mé iuuat quod edó —
(aside) domi:

Forís aliquantillum étiam quod gusto íd beat.

He. Ergásile, salue.

Er. [Breaking down] Dí te bene ament, Hégio!

30 He. Ne flé.

Er. Egone illum nón fleam? egon non défleam Talem ádulescentem?

He. Sémper sensi fílio 140

Meo te ésse amicum et íllum intellexí tibi.

Er. Tum dénique homines nóstra intellegimús bona, Quom quae ín potestate hábuimus ea amísimus.

85 Ego póstquam gnatus tuús potitust hóstium,
Expértus quanti fúerit, nunc desídero. 145

He. Aliénus quom eius incómmodum tam aegré feras, Quid mé patrem par fácereſt quoi illest únicus?

Er. [With an injured air] Aliénus? ego aliénus illi? aha, Hégio,

40 Numquam ístuc dixis néque animum induxís tuom.

Tibi ille únícust, mi etiam único magis únicus. 150

He. Laudó, malum quom amíci tuom ducís malum.
Nunc hábē bonum animum. |

Er. Éheu ! huic illúd dolet,

Quia núnc remissus ést edendi exércitus.

45 He. Nullúmne interea náctu's, qui possét tibi
Remíssum quem dixti ímperare exércitum ? 155

Er. Quid crédis ? fugitant ómnes hanc prouínciam —
Quod óbtígerat postquam cáptust Philopolemús tuos.

He. Non pól mirandumst fúgitare hanc prouínciam.
50 Multís et multigénerebus opus ést tibi
Milítibus. primumdum ópus est Pistorénsibus : 160
Eorúm sunt aliquot génera Pistorénsium.
Opūs Pániceis est, ópūs Placentínis quoque, Opūs Túrdetanis, ópúst Ficedulénsibus.

55 Iam máritumi omnes mílites opūs súnt tibi.
Er. Vt saépe summa ingénia in occultó latent : 165
Hic quális imperátor nunc priuátus est.

He. Habě módo bonum animum. nam íllum confidó
domum

In hís diebus mé reconciliássere.

60 Nam eccúm hic captiuom ádulescentem | Áleum
Prognátum genere súmmo et summis dítiis : 170
Hoc íllum me mutáre confidó pote.

Er. Ita dí deaeque fáxint. — [significantly] sed num quó foras

Vocátus es ad cénam ?

He. Nusquam quód sciam.

65 Sed quíd tu id quaeris ?

Er. Quía mist natalís dies :
Proptérea te uocári — ad te ad cenám uolo. 175

He. Facéte dictum. séd si pauxilló potes Conténtus esse, —

Er. Né perpauxillúm modo :
Nam istóc me adsiduo uíctu delectó domi.

70 Age sís roga emptum: nísi qui meliorem ádferet
 Quae mi átque amicis pláceat condició magis, 180
 Quasi fúndum uendam, meis me addicam légibus.

He. Profúndum uendis tú quidem, haud fundúm mihi.
 Sed sí uenturu's, témperi.

Er. Em, uel iam ótiumst.

75 He. I módo, uenare léporem: nunc irím tenes.
 Nam meús scruposam uíctus commetát uiam. 185

Er. Numquam ístoc uinces me, Hégio: ne póstules: Cum cálceatis déntibus ueniám tamen.

He. Aspér meus uictus sánest.

Er. Sentisne éssitas?

80 He. Terréstris cenast.

Er. [With a wink at the audience] Sús terrestris béstias.

✓He. Multís holeribus.

Er. [Good-naturedly] Cúrato aegrotós domi. 190
 Numquíd uis?

He. Venias témperi.

Er. Menorém mones [exit on the spectators' right].

He. Ibo íntro atque intus súbducam ratiúnculam, Quantíllum argenti mi ápūd trapessitám siet.

85 Ad frátrem, quo ire díxeram, mox íuero [goes into his house].

ACT II.

SCENE 1.

Philocrates and Tyndarus get an opportunity to talk over the respective parts they are to play in the scheme they have devised for effecting the former's escape. — The whole of this scene is accompanied by music; see Introd. 71 and 72. The verse shifts rapidly from one metre to another to suit the varying moods of the actors. For the adaptability of the different metres to different moods, see Introd. 42, 45, 47, 49, 55, etc.

LORARI. CAPTIVI [PHILOCRATES, TYNDARVS].

[Two lorarii come from Hegio's house accompanied by slaves, and by the captives, who are dressed as in the prologue.]

Lo. Si di immortales id uoluerunt, uos hanc aerumnam exsequi, 195

Decet id pati animo | aequo: si id faciétis, leuior
labos erit.

Domī fuístis credo líberi.

Nunc séruitus si euénit, ei uos mórigerari mós bonust
5 Eámque et erili império ingeniis uóstris lenem red-dere.

Indígna digna habénda sunt erūs quae faciūt.

Ca. Oh óh oh! 200

Lo. Éiulatione haud opus est: multa oculis multa † miraclitis.

In ré mala animo sí bono utare, ádiuuat.

Ty. At nós pudet quia cüm catenis súmus.

Lo. At pigeat póstea

- 10        Nóstrum erum, sí †. uos éximat uínculis
           Aút solutós sinat quós argento émerit. 205
- Ty.        Quid ā nóbis metuit? scímus nos 206<sup>a</sup>
           Nóstrum officiúm quod est, sí solutós sinat. 206<sup>b</sup>
- Lo.        Át fugam fíngitis — 207<sup>a</sup>
           Séntio quam rem ágitis. 207<sup>b</sup>
- Ty.        Nós fugiamus? quó fugiamus?
 Lo.        Ín patriam.
- Ty.        Apage! haud nós id deceat
- 15        Fúgitiuos imitári.
 Lo.        Immo edepol, si érit occasio, haúd dehortor.
 Ty.        V́num exoráre uos sínite nos.
 Lo.        Quídnam id est? 210
- T.        V́t sine hisce árbitris [nodding toward the attendant slaves] átque uobís nobis
           Detís locum loquéndi.
 Lo.        Fíat. [To the captives] abscédite hinc: nós concedá-mus huc.
- 20        Séd breuem orátionem íncipisse. 214
- Ty.        Em, istúc mihi certum erät. [To Philocrates] cón-cede huc. 215<sup>a</sup>
- Lo.        [To the slaves] Abíte ab istis.
 Ty.        [To the lorarii] Obnóxii ambo 215<sup>b</sup> Vóbis sumūs própter hanc rém, quom, quae uólu-mus nos,
           Cópia est — † ea fácitís nos cómpotes.
- Ph.        [To Tyndarus] Sécede huc núnciam, sí uidetúr, procul,
- 25        Ne árbitri dícta nostra árbitrarí queant
           Neú permanét palam haec nóstra fallácia. 220
           Nám doli nón doli súnť, nisi astú colas:
           Séd malum máximum, si íd palam próuenit.

Nam sí | erus mihi ěs tu | átque ego me tuom ěsse
seruom assímulo,

80 Taměn uíso opust, cautóst opus, ut hoc sóbrie sineque árbitris 225

Accúrate agátur, docte ét diligénter.

Tanta íncepta rés est: haud sómniculóse hoc Agéndumst.

Ty. Ero út me uolés esse.

Ph. Spéro.

Ty. Nám tú nunc uidés pro tuó caro cápite

35 Carum ófferre mé meum capút uilitáti. 230

Ph. Sció. |

Ty. At scire meménto quando id quód uoles habébis.

Nám fere maxima párs morem hunc homínés ha-bent: quod síbi uolunt,

Dum id ímpetrant, boní sunt:

Sed íd ubi iam peněs sése habent,

40 Éx bonis péssumi et fraudulentíssumi 235

Fíunt. nunc út mihi té uolo esse aútumo.

Ph. Quód tibi suádeam, suádeam meó patri.

Pól ego, si te aúdeam, meúm patrem nóminem:

Nám secundúm patrem tu ěs pater próxumus.

45 Ty. Aúdio.

Ph. Et proptérea saepíus te uti memíneris moneo: 240

Nón ego erus tibí, sed seruos súm. nunc obsecró te hoc unum —

Quóniam nobis di ímmortales ánimum ostenderúnt suom,

Vt qui erum me tibi fuisse atque ěsse nunc conser-uóm uelint —

Quom ántehac pro iure ímperitabam meó, nunc te oro pér precem,

50 Pér fortunam incértam et per mei te érga bonitatém patris 245

Pérque conseruitiúm commune quód hōstica euenít
manu,

Né me secus honóre honestes quám quom seruibás
mihi

Átque ut qui fuerís et qui nunc sís memínisse ut mémineris.

Ty. Scío quidem me te ésse nunc et te ésse me.

Ph. Em, istuc sí potes

55 Mémoriter memínisse, inest spes nóbis in hāc astútia.

SCENE 2.

Hegio has a private interview with Philocrates (as he thinks) and procures what seems to be interesting and important information. He realizes that this is a deceitful world, but he feels great confidence in his ability to look after his own interests. However, he is persuaded to release temporarily one of his captives. — The music still continues throughout the scene. For the movement of trochaic septenarii, and for the manner of rendering them, see Introd. 57 and 70.

HEGIO. PHILOCRATES. TYNDARVS.

[Hegio comes out of his house, addressing some one within.]

He. Iam égo reuortar íntro, si ex his quae uolo ex-quisíuero. [Looking this way and that] 251

Úbi sunt isti quós ante aedis iússi huc producí foras?

Ph. Édepol tibi ne in quaéstione essémus cautum intél-lego:

Íta uinclis custódiisque circúmnoenítí sumus.

5 He. Quí cauet ne décipiatur, uíx cauet quom etiám cauet. 255

Étiam quom cauísse ratus est, saepe is cautor cáptus est.

Ān uero non iústa causast út uos seruem sédulo,
Quós tam grandi sím mercatus praésenti pecúnia?

Ph. Néque pol tibi nos, quía nos seruas, aéquomst uitio uórtere

10 Ph. Néque te nobis, sí | abeamus hínc, si fuať occásio. 260

He. Úť uos hic, itideĩ illic apűd uos meűs seruatur fílius.

Ph. Cáptus est?

He. Ita.

Ph. Nón igitur nos sóli ignauĩ fúĩmus.

He. Sécede huc: nam súnt quae | ex te sólo scitarĩ uolo,
Quárum rerum té falsiloquom mi ésse nolo.

Ph. Nón ero,

15 Quód sciam: siquíd nescibo, id néscium tradám tibi
[they go aside]. 265

Ty. [To the audience] Núnc senex est ín tostrina—núnc
iam cultros ádtinet.

Ne íd quidem, inuolúcrum inicere, uóluit, uestem ut ne ínquinet.

Séd utrum strictimne ádtonsurum dícam esse an per péctinem,

Néscio: uerűm si frugist, úsque admutilabít probe.

20 He. Quid tu? seruosne ésse an liber máuelis, memorá
mihi. 270

Ph. Próxumum quod sít bono quodque á malo longíssume, Íd uolo: quamquám non multum fuít molesta séruitus
Néc mihi secus erát quam si essem fámiliaris fílius.

Ty. [Aside] Eúgepae! Thalém talento nón emam Milé-sium.

25 † Nam ad sapientiam huius nímius nugatór fuit. 275
Úť facete orátionem ad séruitutem cóntulit!

He. Quó de genere nátust illic Phílocrates?

Ph. Polyplúsio:

Quód genus illi est únum pollens átque honoratíssu-mum.

He. Quíd ípsus hic ? quo honórest illic ?

Ph. Súmmo atque ab summis uiris.

80 He. Tum ígitur, ei quom in Áleis tanta grátia est ut praé-dicas, 280

Quíd diuitiae ? súnthne opimae ?

Ph. Vnde éxcoquat sebúm senex.

He. Quíd pater ? uiuítne ?

Ph. Viuom quom índe abimus líquimus.

Núnc uiuatne néene, id Orcum scíre oportet scilicet.

Ty. [Aside] Sálua res est: philosophatur quóque iam, non mendáx modost.

35 He. Quíd erat ei nomén ?

Ph. Thensaurochrýsonicochrýsides. 285

He. Vídēlicet proptér diuitias índitum id nomén quasist ?

Ph. Ímmo edepol proptér auaritiam ipsíus atque audáciam.

Nam ille quidem Theodóromedes fuít germano nómine.

He. Quíd tu ais ? tenáxne pater est eiús ?

Ph. Immo edepol pértinax.

40 Quín etiam ut magís nóscas, genio súo ubi quando sácrificat, 290

Ád rem diuinám quibus est opūs Sámiis uasis útitur, Ne ípse Genius súrripiat. proinde áliis ut credát uide.

He. Séquere hac me igitur. eádem ego ex hoc quae uolo exquaesúero [approaches Tyndarus].

Phílocrates, hic fécit hominem frúgi ut facere opórtuit.

45 Nám | ego ex hoc quo génere gnatus sís scio; hic
fassúst mihi. 295

Haec tu eadem si confiteri uis, tua ex re feceris, Quae tamen scio scire me ex hoc.

Ty. Fecit officium hic suum, Quom tibist confessus uerum: quamquam uolui
sédulo

Meam nobilitatem occultare et genus et diuitias meas,

50 Hégio: nunc quando patriam et libertatem perdidi, 300
Non ego istunc me potius quam te metuere aequom censeo.

Vis hostilis cum istoc fecit meas opes aequabiles.
Memini quom dicto haud audebat, facto nunc laedat
licet.

Sed uiden? fortuna humana fingit artatque ut lubet.
55 Mé qui liber fueram seruom fecit, e summo infumum.
Qui imperare insueram nunc alt(e)r(i)us imperio obse-quor. 306

Et quidem si, proinde ut ipse fui imperator familiae, Habeam dominum, non uerear ne iniuste aut grauiter mi imperet.

Hégio, hoc te monitum, nisi forte ipse non uis, uolu-eram.

60 He. Lóquere audacter.

Ty. Tam ego fui ante liber quam gnatús tuos. 310
Tám mihi quam illi libertatem hostilis eripuit manus.
Tam ille apud nos seruit quam | ego núnc hic apud te seruo.

Est profecto deus qui quae nos gerimus auditque et uidet.

Is uti tu me hic habueris proinde illum illic curauerit.
65 Béne merenti béne profuerit, mále merenti pár erit. 315
Quám tu filiúm tuom, tam páter me meus desiderat.

He. Mémini ego istoc: séd faterin<sup>est</sup> éadem quae hic fas-súst mihi?

Ty. Égo patri meo ésse fateor súmmas diuitiás domi
Méque summo génere gnatum. séd te optestor,
Hégio,

70 Né tuom animum auáriorem fáxint diuitiaé meae, 320
Né patri, tam etsi únicüs sum, decére uideatúr magis
Mé saturum seruíre apud te sumptu et uestitú tuo Pótius quam illi ubi mínime honestumst méndicantem úfuere.

He. Égo uirtute deum ét maiorum nóstrum diues súm
satis.

75 Nón ego omninó lucrum omne esse útile homini exístumo: 325

Scío ego, multos iám lucrum lutuléntos homines réddidit.

Ést etiam ubi profécto damnum praéstet facere quám lucrum.

Ódi ego aurum: múlta multis saépe suasit pérperam.
Núnc hoc animum aduórte, ut ea quae séntio paritér scias.

80 Fílius meus íllic apúd uos séruit captus Álide. 330
Eúm si reddis míhi, praeterea | únum nummum né
duis;

Ét te et hunc amíttam hinc — alio pácto abire nón
potes.

Ty. Óptumum atque aequíssumum oras óptumusque hominum és homo.

Séd ís priuatam séruitutem séruit illi an públicam?

85 He. Priuatam — medicí Menarchi.

Ty. [Aside] Pól ís quidem huius [pointing to Philocrates] ést cluens! 335

[To Hegio] Tam hóc quidem tibi ín procliui quam ímber est quandó pluit.

He. Fác is homo ut redimátur.

Ty. Faciam. séd te id oro, Hégio —

He. Quíduis, dum ab re néquid ores, fáciam.

Ty. Ausculta, túm scies.

Égo me amitti dónicum ille huc rédierit non póstulo :
 90 Vérum, te quaeso, aéstumatum hunc míhi des quem mittam ád patrem, 340
 Vt is homo redimátur illi.

He. Immo álium potius mísero Hínc, ubi erunt indútiae, illuc, tuóm qui conueniát
      patrem,

Quí tua quae tu iússeris mandáta ita ut uelís pérferat.

Ty. Át nil est ignótum ad illum mittere : operam lúseris.
 95 Húnc mitte, hic † omne transactum réddet, si illuc uenerit. 345

Néc quemquam fidéliorem néque quoi plus credát
      potes

Mittere ad eum néc qui magís sit séruos ex senténtia Néque adeo quoi tuóm concredat fílium hodie audáeius.

Né uereare : meó periclo huiús ego | experiár fidem
 100 Frétus ingenio eiús, quod me esse scít sese erga béniuolum. 350

He. Mittam equidem istunc aéstumatum tuá fide, si uís.

Ty. Volo.

Quám citissumé potest, tam hoc cédere ad factúm uolo.

He. Núm quae causast quín, si ille huc non rédeat, uigintí minas

Míhi des pro illo ? |

Ty. Óptuma immo.

He. [ To the lorarii ] Sóluite istum núnciam, 105 Átque utrumque.

Ty. Dí tibi omnes ómnia optata ófferant, 355 Quóm me tanto honóre honestas quómque ex uinclis éximis.

Hóc quidem haud moléstumst, iam quod cóllus collarí caret.

He. Quód bonis benefít beneficium grátia ea grauidást bonis.

Núnc tu illum si illo és missurus, díce, demonstra,
praécipe,

x 110 Quae ád patrem uis núntiari. uín uocem huc ad té?

Ty. Voca. 360

SCENE 3.

Hegio, having heard from Philocrates (whom he supposes to be Tyndarus) the plausible story about the high standing and importance at home of the latter's pretended master, now puts into execution the proposed plan for securing the return of his captured son. He sends the supposed Tyndarus back home to effect an exchange. The parting, in the presence of Hegio, between the pretended slave and the pretended master gives an opportunity for a clever bit of acting. — The scene opens with a matter-of-fact dialogue in iambic senarii. As the interest quickens, and as the time comes to formulate the message to be carried to the prisoner's father (385, cf. 384) and to say the parting words, the verse changes to trochaic septenarii; the music again strikes up and continues to the end of the scene. See Introd. 57 and 70.

HEGIO. PHILOCRATES. TYNDARVS.

[Hegio, after his interview with Tyndarus, crosses over to Philocrates.]

He. Quae rés bene uortat míhi meoque fílio
Vobísque: uolt te nóuos erus operám dare

Tuo uéteri domino, quód is uelit, fidéliter.

Nam ego te aéstumatum huíc dedí uigintí minis.

5 Hic aútem te ait mittere hinc uelle ad patrem, 365
Meum ut illic redimat filium : mutatio
Intér me atque illum ut nóstris fiat filiis.

Ph. Vtróque uorsum réctumst ingeniúm meum,
Ad te átque ad illum : pró rota me utí licet.

10 Vel ego húc uel illuc uórtar quo imperábitis. 370

He. Tuté tibi tuopte ingénio prodes plúrumum,
Quom séruitutem | ita fers ut ferrí decet.
Sequere : [going back with Philocrates, to Tyndarus] ém tibi hominem.

Ty. Grátiam habeó tibi,

Quom cópiam istam mi ét potestatém facis,

15 Vt ego ad parentes hunc remittam núntium, 375

Qui mé quid rerum hic ágitem et quid fierí uelim

Patrí meo ordine ómnem rem illuc pérferat.

Nunc ita conuenit inté me atque hunc, Týndare,

Vt te aéstumatum in Álidem mittam ad patrem ;

20 Si nó n rebitas húc, ut uigintí minas 380

Dem pró te.

Ph. Recte cónuenisse séntio.

Nam páter exspectat aut me aut aliquem núntium,

Qui hinc ad se ueniat.

Ty. Érgo animum aduortás uolo,

Quae núntiare hinc té uolo in patriam ad patrem.

25 Ph. [Feelingly] Philocrates, ut adhúc locorum féci, faciam
sédulo, 385

Út potissumúm quod in rem récte conducát tuam

Íd petam † id persequarque córde et animo atque aúribus.

Ty. Fácis ita ut te fácere oportet: núnc animum aduortás uolo.

X<sup>30</sup> *Om*nium primúm salutem dícito matri ét patri
 Ét cognatis ét siquem alium béneuolentem uideris: 390
 Me híc ualere et séruitutem séruire huic homini óptumo,

Quí me honore honéstiozem sémper fecit ét facit.

Ph. Ístuc ne praecípias: facile mémoria meminí tamen.

Ty. Nám quidém nisi quod cústodem habeo líberum me esse árbitor.

<sup>35</sup> Dícito patrí quo pacto míhi cum hoc conuénierit 395
 De húius filiό.

Ph. Quae memini móra merast monéríer.

Ty. Vt eum redimat ét remittat nóstrum huc amborúm uicem.

Ph. Méminero.

He. At quam prínum poteris: ístuc in rem † utri-quest maxume.

Ph. Nón tuom tu mágís uidere quam ílle suom gnatúm cupit.

<sup>40</sup> He. Méüs mihi, suos quoíquest carus.

Ph. [To Tyndarus] Núm quid aliud uís patri 400 Núntiari?

Ty. Me híc ualere et — [aside, to himself] túte audacter dícito,

Týndare — inter nós fuisse ingénio haud discordábili, Néque te commeruísse culpam néque me aduorsatúm
 tibi

Béneque ero gessísse morem in tántis aerumnís tamen,

<sup>45</sup> Néque med umquam désenuisse té neque factis néque fide 405

Rébus in dubiis, egenis. haec pater quando sciet, Týndare, ut fueris animatus érga suom gnatum átque se,

Númquam erit tam auárus, quín te gratus emittát
manu.

Ét mea opera, si hinc rebito, fáciam ut faciat fácilius.

50 Nám tua opera et cómitate et uirtute et sapiéntia 410

Fécisti, ut redíre liceat ád parentis dénuo,

Quóm | apud hunc conféssus es et génuS et diuitiás
meas:

Quó pacto emisísti e uinclis túom erum tua sapiéntia.

Ph. Féci ego ista ut commémoras et te méminisse id gratúmst mihi.

55 Mérito tibi | ea éuenerunt á me: nam nunc, Phílocrates, 415

Sí|ego item memorém quae me erga múlta fecistí bene,

Nóx diem adimat: nám quasi seruos meús (e)sses,
nihilo sétius,

Míhi | obsequiosús semper fuísti.

He. [Aside] Di uostrám fidem,
Hóminum ingenium líberale! ut lácrumas excutiúnt mihi!

60 Vídeas corde amáre inter se: quántis † laudauit 420
Súom erum seruos cónlaudauit.

Ph. Pól istic me haud centésimumam Pártem laudat quam ípse meritust út laudetur laúdibus.

He. Érgo quom optumé fecisti, núnc adest occásio
Bénéfacta cumuláre, ut erga hunc rém geras fidéliter.

65 Ph. Mágis non factum póssum uelle quam ópera experiar pérsequi. 425

Íd út scias, Iouém supremum téstem laudo, Hégio,

Me infidelem nón futurum Phílocrati.

He.

Probus és homo.

Ph. Néc me secus umquam eí facturum quícquam quam memét mihi.

Ty. Ístaec dicta: te éxperiri | ét opera et factís uolo,

70 Ét quo minüs dixí quam uolui dé te animum aduortás uolo. 430

Átque horunc uerbórum causa cáuēto mi iratús fuas.

Séd, te quaeso, cógitato hinc té mea fidē mittí domum,

Te aéstumatum et méam ěsse uitam hic pró te posítam pígnori,

Né tu me ignorés, quom extemplo meo é conspectu abscésseris,

75 Quóm me seruom in séruitute pró te hic relíqueris 435

Túque te pro líbero esse dúcas, pignus déseras,

Néque des operam pró me ut huius réducem facias fílium.

Seíto te hinc minís uiginti | aéstumatum míttier.

Fác fidelis síis fideli, cáuē fidem fluxám geras.

80 Nám pater, scio, fáciat quae illum fácere oportet ómnia. 440

Sérua tibi In perpétuom amicum me átque hunc inuentum ínueni.

Haéc per dexterám tuam [taking Philocrates' hand] te déxtera retinéns manu

Ópsecro, infidélior mihi né fuas quam ego súm tibi.

Tú hoc age: tu míhi erus nunc es, tú patronus, tú pater:

85 Tíbi commendo spés opesque meás.

Ph.

Mandauistí satis. 445

Sátin habes mandáta quae sunt fácta si referó?

Ty.

Satis.

Ph. Ét tua [bowing to Hegio] et tua [bowing to Tyndarus] húc ornatus réueniam ex senténtia.

Númquid aliud ?

Ty. Vt quam primum póssis redeas.

Ph. Rés monet.

He. Séquere me, uiáticum ut dem | á trapessitá tibi.

90 Eádem opera a praetóre sumam sýngraphum.

Ty. Quem sýngraphum ? 450

He. Quem híc ferat secum ád legionem, hinc íre huic ut liceát domum.

[To Tyndarus] Tu íntro abi.

Ty. [As he goes into the house] Bene ámbulato.

Ph. Béne uale.

He. [Soliloquizing] Edepol rém meam

Cónstabiliui, quom íllos emi dé praeda a quaestóribus :

Éxpédiui ex séruitute fílium, si dís placet.

95 Át etiam dubitáui hos homines émerem an non emerém diu. 455

[To the lorarii, who go at once inside] Séruate istum súltis intus, sérui, ne quoquám pedem

Écferat sine cústode : † ego apparebó domi.

Ád fratrem modó captiuos álios inuisó meos.

Eádem percontábor, ecquis hūnc ádulescentem nó-uerit.

100 [To Philocrates] Séquere tu, te ut ámittam : ei rei prímum praeuortí uolo. [They leave the stage by the right-hand exit.] 460

ACT III.

SCENE 1.

Ergasilus is still on the hunt for a dinner. He thinks times are not what they used to be. — Appropriate music accompanies his soliloquy.

ERGASILVS.

[He enters at the right of the stage, looking quite discouraged.]

Er. Míser homost, qui ipsús sibi quod edit quaérit et id aegre ínuenit.

Séd illest miseriór, qui et aegre quaérit et nil ínuenit.

Ílle miserrumúst, qui, quom esse † cupit, quod edit nón habet.

Nam hércle ego huic dieí, si liceat, óculos effodiám lubens :

5 Íta malignitáte oneravit ómnis mortalís mihi. 465

Néque ieiuniósiorem néque magis ecfertúm fame

Vídi nec quoi mínus procedat quícquid facere occéperit :

Íta uenter guttúrque resident ésurialis férias.

Ílicet parasíticæ arti máxumam malám crucem !

10 Íta iuuentus iám ridiculos ínopesque ab se ségregat.

Níl morantur iám Lacones únisubsellí uiros, 471

Plágipatidas, quíbus sunt uerba síne penu et pecúnia.

Eós requirunt, quí lubenter quom éderint reddánt domi.

Ípsi obsonant, quæ parasitorum ánte erat prouíncia.

15 Ípsi de foró tam aperto cápite ad lenonés eunt 475

Quam ín tribu | apérto capite sóntes condemnánt reos.

Néque ridiculos iám terrunci fáciunt: sese omnés amant.

Nam út dudum hinc ábii, accessi ad ádulescentes ín foro.

‘Sáluete’ inquam. ‘quo ímus una’ inquam ‘ad prándium?’ atque illí tacent.

20 ‘Quís ait: hoc? aut quís profitetur?’ inquam: quasi mutí silent, 480

Néque me rident. ‘úbi cenamus?’ inquam: | atque illi ábnuont.

Díco unum ridículum dictum dé dictis melióribus,
Quíbŭs solebam ménstrualis épulas ante adipíscier:
Némo ridet. scíui extemplo rém de compectó geri.

25 Né canem quidem írritatum uóluit quisquam imitárier, 485

Sáltem, si non árriderent, déntes ut restríngerent.

Ábeo ab illis, póstquam uideo mé sic ludificárier:
Pérگو ad alios, uénio ad alios, deínde ad alios — úna res.

Ómnes compectó rem agunt quasi | ín Velabro oleárii.

30 Núnc redeo inde, quóniam me | ibi uídeo ludificárier. 490

Ítem alii parasíti frustra obámbulabant ín foro.

Núnc barbarica lége certumst iús meum omne pérsequi:

Quí concilium iniére, quo nos uíctu et uita próhibeant,

35 Ís diem dicam, írrogabo múltam, ut mihi cenás decem
Meo árbitratu dént, quom cara annóna sit. sic égero!

Núnc ibo ad portum hínc. est illic mi úna spes cenática: 496

Si éa decolabít, redibo huc ád senem ad cenam áspe-ram [leaves the stage by the left-hand exit].

SCENE 2.

Hegio is highly elated over the prospects of securing the return of his son and congratulates himself upon his clever management of affairs. — His soliloquy forms another canticum (see Introd. 71 and 72), but the exact metrical structure of each verse is so uncertain that no attempt is here made to indicate the scansion.

HEGIO.

[Hegio and Aristophontes enter from the right.]

He. Quid est suavius quam bene rem gerere bono publico, sicut ego feci heri, 498, 499, 500

Quom emi hosce homines? ubi quisque uident, eunt obuiam

5 Gratulanturque eam rem. ita me miserum restitendo
Retinendoque lassum reddiderunt:

Vix ex gratulando miser iam eminebam.

Tandem abii ad praetorem. ibi uix requieui, 505

10 Rogo syngraphum: datur mihi ilico: dedi Tyndaro:
ille abiit domum. 506, 507

Inde ilico reuortor domum, postquam id actumst. 508, 509

Eo protinus ad fratrem inde abii, mei ubi sunt alii captiui: 510

Rogo Philocratem ex Alide ecquis omnium

15 Nouerit. tandem hic [pointing to Aristophontes] exclamat eum sibi esse sodalem.

Dico eum esse apud me: hic extemplo orat obsecratque, Eum sibi ut liceat uidere. iussi ilico hunc exsolui.
 nunc [turning to Aristophontes] tu sequere me, Vt quod me orauisti impetres, eum hominem ut conuenias. [They go inside.] 515

SCENE 3.

Tyndarus finds himself in trouble. The arrival of an old acquaintance on the scene upsets his plans. — The music still continues.

TYNDARVS.

[Tyndarus comes rushing out of Hegio's house.]

Ty. Nunc illud est, quom mé fuisse quam ésse nimio máuelim:

Nunc spés opes auxíliaque a me ségregant spernúntque se.

Hic illest dies, quom núlla uitae meae salus sperábilist:

Neque éxítium exitiost néque adeo spes, quae mi hunc aspellát metum:

5 Nec súbdolis mendáciis mihi úsquam mantellúmst meis. 520

(Nec sýcophantiís nec fucis úllum mantellum óbuiamst.)

Neque déprecatió perfidiis meis nec malefactís fugast,
 Nec cónfidentiae úsquam hospitiumst néc deuorticulúm dolis.

Opérta quae fuére aperta súnť, patent praestígiae.

10 Omnís res palam | est: néque de hac re negótiumst,

Quín male occidam óppetamque péstem eri uicem meamque. 526

Péridit me Arístophóntes híc, qui uenit módo | intro.

Ís me nouit: ís sodalis Phílocrati et cognátus est.

Néque iam Salūs seruáre, si uolt, mé potest: nec cópiast,

15 Nisi si áliquam corde máchinōr astútiam. 530

Quám, malum? quid máchiner? quid cómminiscar?
máxumas

Nugás, ineptias íncipisse: haéreo.

SCENE 4.

Tyndarus is brought to bay, as it were, before Aristophontes. He tries to brazen it out by a clever fiction invented on the spur of the moment, but the case against him is too clear. Hegio finally awakens to the fact that a trick has been played upon him. — Music continues throughout the scene.

HEGIO. ARISTOPHONTES. TYNDARVS.

[Hegio and Aristophontes come out of the former's house.]

He. [Looking this way and that] Quo illúm nunc hominem próripuisse fóráš se dicam ex aédibus?

Ty. [Aside] Núnc enĩm uero ego óccidi: | eúnt ad te hostes, Týndare.

Quíd loquar? quid fábulabor? quíd negabo aut quíd fatebor? 535

Mihi rés ōmnis in íncertó sitast: quid rébus confidám meis?

5 Vtinám te di priūs pérderent quam périisti e patriá tua,

Arístophóntes, qui éx parata re ímparatam omném facis.

Occísast haec res, nísí reperio atrócem mi aliquam astútiam.

He. [To Aristophontes] Sequere: émí tibi hominem, adi átque adloquere.

Ty. [Aside] Quís homost me hominum míserior?

Ar. Quid ístuc est, quod meós te dicam fúgitare oculos, Týndare, 541

10 Próque ignoto me áspernari, quási me numquam nóueris?

Équidem tam sum séruos quam tu, etsi égo domi
libér fui,

Tu úsque a puero séruitutem séruisti in Álide.

He. Édepol minume míror, si te fúgitat aut oculós tuos Aút si te odit, qui ístum appelles Týndarum pro
Phílocrate. 546

15 Ty. Hégio, hic homó rabiosus hábitus est in Álide:

Né tu quod ístic fábuletur aúris immittás tuas.

Nam ístic hastis ínsectatus ést domi matrem ét
patrem,

Ét illic isti quí sputatur mórbus interdúm uenit. 550
Proín tu ab istoc prócũl recedas.

He. Vltro istum a me.

Ar. Ain, uérbero?

20 Mé rabiosum atque ínsectatum esse hástis meum memorás patrem?

Ét eum morbum mi ésse, ut qui me | ópũs sit inspu-
tárier?

He. [Sympathetically] Né uerere: múltos iste mórbus homines mácerat,

Quíbus insputarí saluti fúit atque is prófuit. 555

Ar. Quid tu autem? etiam huic crédis?

He. Quid ego crédam huic?

Ar.

Insanum ésse me.

25 Ty. [Pulling Hegio away] Vídĕn tu hunc, quam inimíco uoltu intúitur? cóncedi óptumumst,

Hégio: fit quod tibi ego dixi, glíscit rabies: cáuĕ tibi.

He. Crédidi esse insánum extemplo, ubi te áppellauit Týndarum.

Ty. Quín suom ipse intérdum ignorat nómen neque scit quí siet. 560

He. Át etiam te suóm sodalem esse aíbat.

Ty.

Haud uidí magis:

30 Ét quidem Ąlcumeus átque Orestes ét Lycurgus póstea
Vna opera mihi súnt sodales qua íste.

Ar.

At etiam, fúrcifer,

Mále loqui mi audés? non ego te nóui?

He.

Pol planum íd quidemst

Nón nouisse, qui ístum appelles Týndarum pro Phí-locrate. 565

Quém uides, eum ignóras: illum nóminas, quem nón
uides.

35 Ar. Ímmo iste eum sese aíť qui non est ésse et qui uero ést negat.

Ty. Tu éníġ repertu's, Phílocratem qui súperes ueriuérbio.

Ar. Pól ego ut rem uideó, tu inuentu's, uéra uanitúdine Quí conuincas. séd quaeso hercle agedum áspice ad me.

Ty.

Em.

Ar.

Díc modo:

570

† Te negas Týndarum esse?

Ty.

Négo ínquam.

Ar.

Tun te Phílocratem

40 Ésse ais?

Ty. Ego inquam.

Ar. [To Hegio] Túne huic credis?

He. Plús quidē quam tibi aut mihi: Nam ille quidem, quem tu hunc memoras esse, hodie hinc abiit Álidem

Ád patrem huius.

Ar. Quém patrem, qui séruos est?

Ty. Et tú quidem
Séruos es, libér fuisti: et égo me confidó fore, 575
Si huius huc recónciliasso in líbertatem fílium.

45 Ar. Quíd ais, furcifér? tun te gnatúm memoras † líberum?

Ty. Nón equidem me Líberum, sed Phílocratem esse aió.

Ar. Quid est?
Vt scelestus, Hégio, nunc iste te ludós facit.

Nám | is est seruos ípse neque praetér se umquam
ei seruós fuit. 580

Ty. Quía tute ipse egés in patria néc tibi qui uiuás domist,

50 Ómnis inueníri similis tuí uis. non mirúm facis:
Ést miserorum, ut máleuolentes sint atque inuideánt
bonis.

Ar. Hégio, uidē sís, nequid tu huic témere insistas crédere:

Átque ut perspició, profecto iám | aliquid pugnae édidit. 585

Fílium tuom quód redimere se aít, id ne utiquam míhi placet.

55 Ty. Scío te id nolle fíeri: efficiam támen ego id, si di ádiuuant.

Íllum restituam huic, hic autem in Álidem me meó patrī:

Própterea ad patrem hinc amisi Týndarum.

Ar. Quin túte is es:

Néque praeter te in Álide ullus séruos istoc nóminest. 590

Ty. Pérgin seruom me éxprobrare esse, íd quod ui hostili óptigit?

60 Ar. Énīm uero † iam nequeo cóntineri.

Ty. [To Hegio] Heus áúdin quid ait? quín fugis?
Iam íllie hic nos ínsectabit lápidibus, nisi íllúnc iubes Cónprehendi.

Ar. Crúcior.

Ty. Ardent óculi: fit opus, Hegio. 594

Vídēn tu illi maculári corpus tótum maculis lúridis?
Átra bilis ágitat hominem.

Ar. At pól te, si hic sapiát senex,

65 Píx atra agitet ápūd carnificem tuóque capiti inlúceat.

Ty. Iám deliraménta loquitur: láruae stimulánt uirum.

He. Hérele quid si hunc cónprehendi iússerim?

Ty. Sapiás magis.

Ar. Crúcior lapidem nón habere mé, ut illi mastígiae 600
Cérebrum excutiam, quí me insanum uérbis concinnát suis.

70 Ty. Áúdin lapidem quaéritare?

Ar. Sólus te solúm uolo,
Hégio.

He. Istine lóquere, siquid uís: procul tamen áúdiam.

Ty. Námque edepol si adbítes propius, ós denasabít tibi Mórdicus.

Ar. Neque pól me insanum, Hégio, esse créduis Néque fuisse umquám neque esse mórbum quem istie aútumat. 606

75 Vĕrũm siquid mĕtuis a me, iũbĕ me uincirĩ: uolo,
Dum ĩstic itidem uĩnciatur.

Ty. Īmmo enim uero, Hĕgio, Īstic qui uolt uĩnciatur.

Ar. Táčĕ modo: ego te, Philócrates
Fálse, faciam ut uĕrus hodie réperiare Týndarus. 610
[Tyndarus makes signs to him] Quid mi abnutas?

Ty. Tĩbi ego ħbnuto?

Ar. [To Hegio] Quid agat, si absis lóngius?

80 He. Quid ais? quid si adeam hũnc insanum?

Ty. Nugas: ludificábitur, Gárriet quoi néque pes umquam néque caput compáreat.

Órnamēta absũnt: Aiācem, hunc quóm uides, ipsũm
uides. 615

He. Nĩhili facio, támen adibo.

Ty. [Aside] Nũc ego omnino óccidi, Nũc ego ĩnter sacrũm saxumque stó nec quid faciám scio.

85 He. Dó tibi operam, Arístophontes, síquid est quod mé uelis.

Ar. Éx me audibis uĕra quae nunc fálse opinare, Hĕgio.
Séd hõc primum me expúrigare tĩbi uolo, me insániam 620

Néque tenere néque mi esse ullum mórbum nisi quod séruio.

Át ita me rex deórum atque hominum fáxit patriāe
cómpotem,

90 Vt ĩstic Philócratés non magis est quam aút ego aut tu.

He. Eho, díe mihi,
Quís illic igitur ést?

Ar. Quēn dudum díxi a principiō tibi.
Hóc si secūs repéries, nullam caúsam dico, quín mihi
Ét parentum et líbertatis ápūd te deliquió siet. 626

He. [To Tyndarus] Quíd tu ais?

Ty. Me túom ěsse seruom et té meum erum.

He. Haud istúc rogo.

95 Fuístin liber?

Ty. Fúi.

Ar. Ením uero nón fuit, nugás agit.

Ty. Quí tu seís? an tú fortasse fuísti meae matri óbstitrix, Qui íd tam audacter dícere audes?

Ar. Púerum te uidí puer.

Ty. Át ego te uideó maior maiórem: | em rursúm tibi!
Meám rem non curés, si recte fácias: num ego curó tuam? 632

100 He. Fúitne huic patér Thensaurochrýsonicochrýsides?

Ar. Nón fuit, neque égo istuc nomen úmquam audiui ante húncc diem.

Philocrati Theodóromedes fuít pater.

Ty. [Aside] Pereó probe.

[Pressing his hand to his heart] Quín quiescis? í dierectum, cór meum, ac suspénde te: 636

Tú sussultas, égo miser uix ásto prae formídine.

105 He. Sátin istuc mihi éxquisitumst, fuísse hunc seruom in Álide

Néque ěsse hunc Philocratém?

Ar. Tam satís quam núnquam hoc inueniés secus. 639
Séd ubi is nunc est?

He. Vbi ego minume atque ípsus se uolt máxume.
Tum ígitur ego derúncinatus, deártuatus súm miser Huiús scelesti téchinis, qui me ut lúbitumst ductauít dolis.

110 Séd uidě sis.

Ar. Quin éxploratum díco et prouisum hóc tibi.

He. Cérton ?

Ar. Quin nil, ínquam, inuenies mágis hoc certo cértius:
Phílocrates iam inde úsque amicus fuít mihi a puero puer. 645

He. Séd qua faciest tuós sodalis Phílocrates ?

Ar. Dicám tibi :

Mácilento ore, náso acuto, córpore albo, oculís nigris,
115 Súbrufus aliquántum, crispus, cíncinnatus.

He. Cónuenit.

Ty. [Aside] Vt quidem hercle in médium ego hodie pés-sume procésserim !

Vae illis uirgis míseris, quae hodie in térgo morien-túr meo ! 650

He. Vérba mihi data ésse uideo.

Ty. [Aside] Quíd cessatis, cómpedes, Cúrrere ad me méaque amplecti crúra, ut uos custó-diam ?

120 He. Sátin me illi hodié scelesti cápti ceperúnt dolo.

Íllic seruom se ássimulabat, híc sese autem líberum.
Núculeum amisí, reliqui pínori putámína. 655

Íta mi stolido súrsum uorsum os súbleuere offúciis.
Hícquiděm me numquam írridebit. [Calling inside
to his lorarii] Cólaphe, Cordalió, Corax,

125 Íte istinc, ecférte lora. [Lorarii enter, with thongs in their hands.]

Colaphus.

Núm lignatum míttimur ?

SCENE 5.

Tyndarus suffers the consequences of his trickery. — The music has ceased, and the dialogue is carried on throughout the scene in iambic senarii. See Introd. 40 and 70.

HEGIO. LORARII. TYNDARVS. ARISTOPHONTES.

[Hegio addresses the lorarii who have just entered.]

He. Inícite huic manicas † mastígiae.

Ty. Quid hoc ést negoti? quíd ego deliquí?

He. Rogas? 660

Satór sartorque scélerum et messor máxume.

Ty. Non óccatorem dícere audebás prius?

5 Nam sémper occant priús quam sariunt rústici.

He. At út confidentér mihi contra ástitit.

Ty. Decet innocentem séruom | atque innóxium 665

Confidentem esse, suom ápod erum potíssimum.

He. Adstríngite isti súltis uehementér manus.

10 Ty. Tuós sum: tu has quidém [holding out his hands] uel praecidí iube.

Sed quíd negotist? quam ób rem suscensés mihi?

He. Quia mé meamque rém, quod in te unó fuit, 670

Tuís scelestis fálsidicis falláciis

Delácerauisti deártuauistíque opes,

15 Confécisti omnis rés ac rationés meas.

Ita mi éxemisti Philocratem falláciis.

Illum ésse seruom crédidi, te líberum: 675

Ita uósmet aiebátis itaque nómina

Intér uos permutástis.

Ty. Fateor ómnia

20 Facta ésse ita ut tu dícis et falláciis

Abísse eum abs te méa opera atque astútia:

An, óbsecro hercle te, íd nunc suscensés mihi? 680

He. At cū cruciatu mǎxumo id factūmst tuo.

Ty. Dum ne ób malefacta péream, parui | aéstumo.

25 *Si ego híc peribo, ast ille ut dixit nón redit,
At erít mi hoc factum mórtuo memorábile,
Me méum erum captum ex séruitute atque hóstibus
Reducém fecisse líberum in patriam ad patrem, 686
Meúmque potius mé caput perículo*

30 Praeóptauisse quam ís periret pónere.

He. Facito érgo ut Ācherúnti clueas glória.

Ty. Qui pér uirtutem, périit, at non íterit. 690

He. Quando égo te exemplis péssumis cruciáuero

35 *Atque ób sutelas tuás te Morti mísero,
Vel te ínteriisse uél periisse praédicent:
Dum péreas, nil † interdico dicant úfuere.*

Ty. Pol si ístuc faxis, haúd sine poena féceris, 695
Si ille húc rebitet, sícut confido áffore.

Ar. [Aside] Pro di ínmortales! núnc ego teneo, núnc scio 40 *Quid hóc sít negoti: méus sodalis Phílocrates
In líbertatest ad patrem in patriá. bene est: 699
Nec quísqum | est mihi aéque melius quói uelim.
Sed hóc mihi aegrest me huíc dedisse operám malam,
Qui núnc propter me méaque uerba uínctus est.*

45 He. Votuín te quicquam mi hódie falsum próloqui?

Ty. Votuísti.

He. Cur es aúsus mentirí mihi?

Ty. Quia uéra obsessent illi quoi | operám dabam: 705
Nunc fálša prosunt.

He. Át tibi oberunt.

Ty. Óptumest:

50 *At erúm seruauí, quém seruatum gaúdeo,
Quoi mé custodem addíderat erūs maiór meus.
Sed málene id factum | árbitrare?*

He.

Péssume.

Ty. At ego áio recte, qui ábs te sorsum séntio : 710

Nam cógitato, síquis hoc gnató tuo

Tuos séruos faxit, quálem haberes grátiam ?

55 Emitteresne néene eum seruóm manu ?Essétne apud te is séruos acceptíssimus ?Respónde.He.Opinor.Ty. Cúr ergo iratús mihi es ? 715*He.* Quia illí fuisti quám mihi fidélior.Ty. Quid tu ? úna nocte póstulauisti ét die60 Recéns captum hominem, núperum et nouícium,Te pérdocere, ut mélius consulerém tibiQuam illí quicum una a púero aetatem exégeram ? 720*He.* Ergo áb eo petito grátiam istam. [To the lorarii] dúcite,*Vbi pónderosas crássas capiat cómpedes :*65 [To Tyndarus] Inde íbis porro in látomias lapidárias.Ibi quom álii octonos lápidés effodiúnt, nisiCottídiano sésquiopus conféceris, 725*Sescéntoplagó nómen indetúr tibi.Ar.* Per deós atque homines égo te obtestor, Hégio,70 Ne tu ístunc hominem pérdis.He.Curábitur :Nam nóctu neruo uínetus custodíbitur,Intérdius sub térra lapides éximet. 730*Diu ego hunc cruciabo, nón uno absoluám die.Ar.* Certúmnest tibi ístuc ?*He.Nón moriri cértius.*75 [To the lorarii] Abdúcite istum actútum ad Hippolytúm fabrum,Iubéte huic crassas cómpedes inpíngier :

Inde éxtra portam ad meúm libertum Córdalum 735
In lápicidinas fácite deductús siet.

Atque hunc me uelle dícite ita curárier,
80 Nequí deterius huíc sit quam quoi péssumest.

Ty. Cur égo te inuito me ésse saluom póstulem ?
Perículum uitae meae tuo stat perículo. 740

Post mórtem in morte níl est quod metuám mali.
Et sí peruiuo usque ád summam aetatém, tamen
85 Breue spátiumst perferúndi quae minitás mihi.
Vale átque salue, etsi áliter ut dicám meres.
Tu, Arístophontes, dé me ut meruisti, íta uale : 745
Nam míhi propter te hoc óptigit.

He. Abdúcite.

Ty. At únum hoc quaeso, si húc rebitet Philócrates, 90 Vt mi éius facias cónueniundi cópíam.

He. Peristis, nisi hunc iam é conspectu abdúcitís. [The lorarii push and drag him toward the right-hand exit.]

Ty. [Struggling] Vis haéc quidem herclest, ét trahi et trudí simul [exit]. 750

He. Illic ést abductus récta in phylacam, ut dígnus est.
Ego illís captiuis áliis documentúm dabo,
95 Ne tále quisquam fácinus incipere aúdeat.
Quod ábsque hoc esset, quí mihi hoc fecít palam,
Vsque óffrenatum suís me ductarént dolis. 755

Nunc cértumst nulli pósthac quicquam crédere :
Satís súm semel decéptus. sperauí miser
100 Ex séruitute me éxemisse fílium,
Ea spés elapsast. pérdidi unum fílium,
Puerúm quadrimum quém mihi seruos súrpuít, 760
Neque eúm seruom umquam répperi neque fílium :
Maiór potitus hóstiumst. quod hóc ést scelus ?

105 Quasi in órbitatem líberos prodúxerim.

[To Aristophontes] Sequere hác: reducam te úbi fuisti. néminis

Míserére certumst, quía mei miseret néminem. 765

Ar. Exaúspicaui ex uínclis: nunc intéllego

Redaúspicandum esse ín catenas dénuo. [They leave the stage by the right-hand exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE 1.

Ergasilus feels assured of feasting without end, in consequence of a good piece of news he has for Hegio. — His soliloquy, uttered now in trochaic septenarii, now in iambic octonarii, is accompanied by appropriate music. See Introd. 56, 57, 43, 45, 70.

ERGASILVS.

[Ergasilus enters from the left, in high glee.]

Er. Iúppiter suprême, seruas mé measque augés opes :

Máxumas opímitates ópiparasque offérs mihi :

Laudém lucrum ludúm iocum festíuitatem férias 770

Pompám penum potátiones sáuritatem gaúdium.

5 Néc quoiquam homini súpplicare núnc certumst †
mihi :

Nam uél prodesse amíco possum uél inimicum pér-
dere.

Íta híc me amoenitáte amoena amoénus onerauít dies :

Síne sacris heréditatem sum áptus effertíssumam. 775

Nunc ád senem cursúm capessam hunc Hégionem, quóí boni

10 Tantum áfferó, quantum ípse a diuis óptat, atque etiam ámplius.

Nunc cérta res est, eódem pacto ut cómici seruí solent, Coníciam in collum pállium, primo éx me hanc rem ut aúdiat :

Speróque me ob hunc núntium | aetérnum adepturúm cibum.

SCENE 2.

Ergasilus breaks the good news to Hegio. — Verses 781 to 790 form the third canticum; the music continues throughout the scene. See Introd. 71 and 72.

HEGIO. ERGASILVS.

[Hegio enters from the right. He and Ergasilus do not see each other at first.]

He. [To himself] Quanto ín pectore hánc rem meó magis uolúto, Tantó mi aegritúdo auctiór est in ánimo.

Ad íllum modúm sublitum ós esse mi hódie!

Neque íd perspicere quíui.

5 Quod quóm scibitúr, tum per úrbem inridébor. 785

Quom extémplo ad forum áduenero, ómnes loquéntur

‘Híc íllest senéx doctus, quói uerba dáta sunt.’

Sed Érgasilus éstne hic, procúl quem † uideo?

Conlécto quidémst pallió: quidnam actúrust?

10 Er. [To himself] Moue áps te moram atque, † Ergasile, age hánc rem ~~Scilicet~~ 790

Éminōr intérmínorque, nequis † mihi obstiterit óbuiam,

Nísi qui satís diú uixisse sése homo arbitrábitur:

Nám qui obstiterit óre sistet.

He. [Aside] Híc homo pugilatam incipit.

Er. Fácere certumst. proínde ut omnes ítinera insístánt sua, 794

15 Né quis in hanc plateám negoti cónferat quicquám sui:

Nám meus est ballísta pugnus, cúbitus catapultást
mihi,

Ūmerus aries: túm genu ād quemque iécero, ad ter-rám dabo.

Déntilegos omnés mortales fáciam, quemque offén-dero.

He. [Aside] Quae íllaec eminátíost nam? néqueo mirarí
satis.

20 Er. Fáciam, ut huius dieí locique meíque semper mémi-nerit: 800

Quí mihi ín cursu, opstíterit faxo uítae is extempló suae.

He. [Aside] Quid hic homo tantum íncipissit fácere cum tantís minis?

Er. Príus edico, néquis propter cúlpani capiatúr suam, Cóntinete uós domi, prohibéte a uobis uím meam.

25 He. [Aside] Míra edepol sunt ní hic ín uentrem sumpsit confidéntiam. 805

Vaé misero illi, quoíus cibo iste fáctust imperiósior!

Er. Túm pistores serófipasci quí alunt furfuribús sues, Quárum odore praéterire némo pistrínúm potest:
Eórum si quoiúsquam serofam in público conspéxero,
30 Éx ipsis dominís meis pugnis éxculcabo fúrfures. 810

He. [Aside] Básilicas edíctiones átque imperiosás habet.
Sátur homost, habét profecto in uéntre confiden-tiam.

Er. Túm piscatorés qui praebent pópulo pisces foétidos,
Qui áduehuntur quádrupedanti crúcianti canthério,
35 Quórum odos subbásilicanos ómnes abigit ín forum:
Eís ego ora uérberabo súrpiculis piscáriis, 816
Ūt sciant aliéno naso quam éxhibeant moléstiam.
Túm lanii autem quí concinnant líberis orbás oues, Quí locant caedúndos agnos ét duplam agninám
danunt,

40 Quí petroni nómen indunt uérueci sectário: 820
 Éum ego si in uía petronem pública conspéxero, Ét petronem et dóminum reddam mórtales misér-rimos.

He. [Aside] Eúgepae: | edíctiones aédilicias hícquidem habet,
 Mírumque adeost ni húnec fecere sibi | Aetoli agoránomum.

45 Er. Nón ego nunc parasítus sum, sed régum rex regálior: 825

Tántus uentri cómmeatus méo adest in portú cibus.
 Séd ego cesso hunc Hégionem oneráre laetitiá senem?
 Quí hominē | adaéque nemo uíuit fortunátior.

He. [Aside] Quae illaec est laetítia quam illic laétus largitúr mihi?

50 Er. [Knocking at Hegio's door] Heús! ubi estis? écquis † hoc aperit óstium? 830

He. [Aside] Híc homo ad cenam récipit se ad me. |

Er. Áperite hasce ambás fores Priús quam pultando ássulatim fóribus exitium ádfero.

He. [Aside] Perlúbet hunc hominem cónloqui. | [Aloud]
 Ergásile!

Er. [Without turning] Ergasilum quí uocat?

He. Respíce.

Er. Fortuna quód tibi nec fáciť nec faciet, mé iubes.

55 Séd quis est?

He. Réspice ad me: Hégio sum.

Er. [Turning around] Óh mihi, 835 †Quantumst hominum optumorum optume, in tempore aduenis.

He. Nesciõquem ad portum náctus es ubi ·cénes: eo fastídis.

Er. Cédo manum.

He. Manúm ?

Er. Manum, inquam, cédo tuam actutúm.

He. [Holding out his hand] Tene.

Er. [Shaking it heartily] Gaúde.

He. Quid ego gaúdeam ?

Er. Quia ego ímpero: age [shaking it with both of his own] gaudé modo.

60 He. Pól maerores míhi ánteuortunt gaúdiis.

Er. . . . . . 840

Iám | ego ex corpore éxigam omnis máculas maerorúm tibi:

Gaúde [still shaking Hegio's hand] audacter.

He. Gaúdeo, etsi níl scio quod gaúdeam.

Er. Béne facis: iubé —

He. Quid iubeam ? |

Er. Ígnem ingentem fieri.

He. Ígnem ingentem ?

Er. Ita díco, magnus út sit.

He. Quid ? me, uólturi,

65 He. Tuán causa aedis íncensurum cénses ?

Er. Noli iráscier. 845

Iúbēn an non iubés astitui | aúlas, patinas élui,

Láridum atque epulás foueri fóculis feruéntibus,

Álium pisces praéstinatú ·abíre ?

He. [Aside] Hic uigilans sómniat.

Er. Álium porcínam átque agnínam et púllos gallináceos ?

70 He. Scís bene esse, sí sit unde.

Er. Pérnám | atque ophthálmíam, 850

Hóraeum scombrum.ét trugonum et cétum et mollem cáseum ?

He. Nóminandi istórum tibi erit mágis quam edundi cópia Híc apud me, Ergásile.

Er. Mean me caúsa hoc censes dícere ?

He. Néc nil hodie néc multo plus tu híc edes, ne frústra sis :
75 Proín tu tui cottídiani uícti uentrem ad me ádferas.

Er. Quín ita faciam, | út te cupias fácere sumptum, etsi
égo uetem. 856

He. Égone ?

Er. Tune.

He. Túm tu mi igitur érus es.

Er. Immo béneuolens.

Vín te faciam fórtunatum ?

He. Málim quam miserúm quidem.

Er. Cédo manum.

He. [Extending it] Em manúm.

Er. Di te omnes ádiuuant.

He. Nil sentio.

80 Er. Nón enim es in sénticeto, eó non sentis. séd iube
Vása tibi pura ápparari | ád rem diuinám cito 861
Átque | agnum afférri proprium pínguem.

He. Cur ?

Er. Vt sácrufices.

He. Quoi deorum ?

Er. Mihi hércle : nam ego nunc tíbi sum summus Iúppiter,

Ídem ego sum Salús Fortuna Lúx Laetitia Gaúdium : 85 Proín tu deum hunc sáturitate fácias tranquillúm
tibi. 865

He. Ésurire míhi uidere.

Er. Míquidem esurio, nón tibi.

He. Tuo árbitratu: fácale patior.

Er. Crédo: consuetú's puer.

He. Iúppiter te díque perdant.

Er. Te hérele — mi aequomst grátias Ágere ob nuntiúm: tantum ego nunc pórtó a portu tíbi boni.

90 Núnc tu mihi placés.

He. Abĩ, stultu's: séro post tempús uenis. 870

Er. Ígitur olim si ádueníssem, mágis tu tum istuc díceres.

Núnc hanc laetitiam áccipe a me quá m fero: nam fílium

Tuóm modo in portú Philopoleum uíuom, saluom et sóspitem

Vídi in publicá celoce ibidémque illum adulescéntulum

95 Áleum una et tuóm Stalagmum séruom qui aufugít domo, 875

Quí tibi surripuít quadrimum púerum fíliolúm tuom.

He. Ábi ĩn malam rem, lúdis me.

Er. Ita me amábit sancta Sáturitas,
Hégio, itaque suó me semper cóndecoret cognómine,
Vt ego uidi.

He. Meúm gnatum?

Er. Tuóm gnatum et geniúm meum.

100 He. Ét captiuom illum Álidensem?

Er. Μὰ τὸν Ἀπόλλω.

He. Et séruolum 880
Meúm Stalagmum, meúm qui gnatum súrripuit?

Er. Ναὶ τὰν Κόραν.

He. Iám diu?

Er. Ναὶ τὰν Πραινέστην.

He. Vénit ?

Er. Ναὶ τὰν Σιγνίαν.

He. Cértou ?

Er. Ναὶ τὰν Φρουσινῶνα.

He. Vídě sis !

Er. Ναὶ τὰν Ἀλάτριον.

He. Quid tu per barbáricas urbes iúras ?

Er. Quia enim item áspærae

105 Súnt ut tuom uictum aútumabas ésse.

He. Vae aetati tuae ! 885

Er. Quíppe quando míhi nil credis, quód ego dico sédulo.
Séd Stalagmus quoiús erat tunc nátionis, quom hínce abit ?

He. Sículus.

Er. At nunc Sículus non est : Bóius est, boiám terit :

Líberorum quaérundorum caúsa ei credo uxór datast.

110 He. Díc, bonan fidé tu mi istaec uérba dixistí ?

Er. Bona. 890

He. Di ínmortales, íterum gnatus uídeor, si uera aútu-mas.

Er. Aín tu ? dubium habébis, etiam sáncte quom ego iurém tibi ?

Póstremo, Hegió, si parua iúri iurandóst fides,
Víse ad portum.

He. Fácere certumst : tu íntus cura quód opus est.

115 Súme, posce, próme quiduis : té facio cellárium. 895

Er. Nam hércle nisi mantíscinatus próbe ero, fusti péc-tito.

He. Aéternum tibi dapinabo uíctum, si uera aútumas.

Er. Vnde id ?

He. A me meóque gnato.

Er. Spónden tu istud ?

He. Spóndeo.

Er. Át ego tuom tibi áduenisse filium respódeo.

120 He. Cúra quam optumé potes.

Er. Bene ámbula et redámbula. [Hegio leaves the stage by the left-hand exit.] 900

SCENE 3 (?)

Ergasilus thinks his turn has come at last. — Music continues.

ERGASILVS.

Er. Íllic hinc abiit: míhi rem summam crédidit cibárium.
Di ímmortales, iam út ego collos praétruncabo tégoribus !

Quánta pernis péstis ueniet, quánta labes lárído,
Quánta sumini ábsumedo, quánta callo cálamitas,
6 Quánta laniis lássitudo, quánta porcináriis. 905
Nám si alia memorém quae ad uentris uíctum conducúnt morast.

Núnc ibo, ut pro praéfectura meá ius dicam lárído, Ét quae pendent índemnatae pérnis auxilium út feram [goes into Hegio's house].

SCENE 4 (?)

The stage remains unoccupied for some time after Ergasilus has gone inside. Then a slave rushes out, in headlong haste, to tell of the havoc that is being made. — The music still continues.

PVER.

Pu. Díéspiter te deíque, Ergasile, pérđant et uentrém tuom

Parasítosque omnis ét qui posthac cénam parasitís dabit. 910

Cladés calamitasque íntemperies módo In nostram aduenít domum.

Quasi lúpus esuriens tímui ne in me fáceret ímpe-tum †:

5 Vbi uoltus . . . sur . . . ntis . . . ímpetum 912<sup>b</sup>

Nimísque hércle ego illum mále formidaui: íta frendebat déntibus.

Aduéniens totum déturbauit cúm carnē carnárium, Arrípuit gladium, praétruncauit tríbūs tegoribus glándia, 915

Aulás calicesque omnís confregit nísi quae modialés erant:

10 Coquõm pércontabatúr, possentne sériæ feruésce-re: Cellás refregit ómnis intus réclisitque armárium.

Adséruate istunc, súltis, serui: ego íbo, ut conueniám senem.

Dicam, út sibi penum álibi adornet, síquidem sese
utí uolet: 920

Nam híc quidem | ut adórnat aut iam níl est aut iam
níl erit [rushes back into the house].

ACT V.

SCENE 1.

The lost is found, and general good feeling prevails. The future of Tyndarus looks brighter. — From this point on, the music is continuous throughout the play until 1029.

HEGIO. PHILOPOLEMVS. PHILOCRATES. STALAGMVS.

[Hegio, accompanied by his elder son, Philocrates and the runaway slave, enter from the left of the stage.]

He. [To his son] Iouí deisque agó gratiás merito mágnas, Quom te† reducem tuo patrí reddidérunt
 Quomque éx miseriís plurumís me exemérunt,
 Quae adhúc te caréns dum hic fuí sustentábam, 925
 5 Quomque hunc [pointing to Stalagmus] conspicó in potéstate nóstra
 Quomque haéc . . . repértast fidés firma nóbis.

Philop. Sátis iam dolui ex ánimo et cura, sátis me laorumis máceraui, Sátis iam audiui tuás aerumnas ád portum mihi quas memorasti:

Hóc agamus.

Philoc. [To Hegio] Quíd nunc, quoniam técum seruauí fidem 930

10 Tíbique hunc reducem in líbertatem féci?

He. Fecisti út tibi,
 Philocrates, numquám referre grátiam possím satis,
 Proínde ut tu proméritu's de me et filio. |

Philop.

Immó potes,

Páter, et poteris ét ego potero et dĩ eam potēstatém dabunt, 934

Út beneficium béne merenti nóstro merito múneres :

15 Sícut tu huic [nodding toward Stalagmus] potés, pater mi, fácere merito máxume.

He. Quid opust uerbis? [to Philocrates] língua nullast quá negem quidquíd roges.

Philoc. Póstulo abs te, ut mi illum reddas séruom quem hic relíqueram

Pígnus pro me, quí mihi melior quá m sibi sempér
fuit,

Pró benefactis éius ut ei prétium possim réddere.

20 He. Quód bene fecistí, referetur grátia. id quod pó-stulas, 941

Ét id et aliud quód me orabis ímpetrabis : átque te Nólim suspensére, quod ego irátus ei fecí male.

Philoc. Quid fecisti ?

He. In lápicidinas cónpeditum cóndidi,
Úbi rescui míhi data esse uérba.

‘ Philoc. Vae miseró mihi ! 945

25 Própter meum capút labores hómini euenisse óptumo !

He. Át ob eam rem míhi libellam pró eo árgenti né
duis :

Grátis a me út sit liber dúcito.

Philoc.

Edepol, Hégio,

Fácís benigne. séd quaeso hominem ut iúbeas arcessí.

He.

Licet.

[Calling inside to his slaves] Úbi | estis, uos ? íte actutum, Týndarum huc arcéssite. 950

- 30 [To Philocrates and Philopolemus] Vós ite intro:
 intéribi ego ex hac státua [looking sternly at Stalagmus] uerbereá uolo
 Érogitare, meó minore quíd sit factum fílio.
 Vós lauate intéribi.
- Philop.* Sequere hac, Philocrates, me intró.
- Philoc.* Sequor. [Philopolemus and Philocrates go inside.]

SCENE 2.

Hegio questions Stalagmus, with rather startling results.

HEGIO. STALAGMVS.

[Hegio turns and addresses Stalagmus, who has hitherto been standing at the back of the stage.]

He. [With a sneer] Áge tu illuc procéde, bone uir, lépidum mancupiúm meum.

St. Quíd me oportet fácere, ubi tu tális uir falsum aútumas? 955

Fúi ego bellus, lépidus: bonus uir núnquam neque frugí bonae

Néque ero | umquam; né spem ponas mé bonae frugí fore.

5 He. Própemodum ubi locí fortunae tuaé sint facile intélligis:

Sí eris uerax, tua éx re: facies éx mala meliúsculam.

Récte et uera lóquere: sed neque uére neque recté | adhuc 960

Fécisti umquam.

St. Quód ego fatear, crédin, pudeat quom aútumes?

He. Át ego faciam ut púdeat: nam in rubórem te totúm dabo.

10 St. Éia, credo ego, ímperito plágas minitarís mihi:
Tándem | ista aufér, dic quid fers, út feras hinc
quód petis.

He. Sátis facundu's: séd iam fieri dícta compendí uolo. 965

St. Vt uis fiat.

He. [Aside] Béne morigerus fúit puer: nunc nón decet.

Hóc agamus. iam ánimum aduerte ac míhi quae dicam edíssere.

15 Sí eris uerax, éx tuis rebus féceris meliúsculas.

St. Núgae istaec sunt: nón me censes scíre quid dignús siem?

He. Át ea subterfúgere potis es paúca, si non ómnia. 970

St. Paúca effugiam, scío: nam multa euénient, et meritó meo, Quía ét fugi et tibi surripui fílium et eum uéndidi.

20 He. Quoí homini?

St. Theodóromedi in Álide Polyplúsio
Séx minis.

He. Pro di ínmortales! ís quidem huius ést pater Phílocrati.

St. Quin meliús noui quám tu et uidi saépius. 975

He. Sérua, Iuppitér supreme, et me ét meum gnatúm mihi!

[Calling excitedly into the house] Phílocrates, per tuóm te genium | óbsecro, exi: té uolo.

SCENE 3.

The prospects of Tyndarus look still brighter. Hegio's cup of happiness is finally filled to overflowing. Still, there is some bitter along with the sweet.

PHILOCRATES. HEGIO. STALAGMVS.

[Philocrates hurries out of the house at the urgent call.]

Ph. Hégio, assum : síquid me uis, ímpera.

He. Hic gnatúm meum
Tuó patri ait se uéndidisse séx minis in Álide.

Ph. [To Stalagmus] Quám diu id factúmst ?

St. Hic annus íncipit uicénsumus. 980

Ph. [To Hegio] Fálša memorat.

St. Aút ego aut tu : nám tibi quadrímulum

5 Tuós pater pecúliarem páruolo pueró dedit.

Ph. [To Stalagmus] Quíd erat ei nomén ? si uera dícis, memoradúm mihi.

St. Paégnium uocitátust : post uos índidistis Týndaro.

Ph. Cúr ego te non nóui ?

St. Quia mos ést obliuisci hómínibus 985
Néque nouisse quóius nili sít faciunda grátia.

10 Ph. Díc mihi, isne istíc fuit quem uéndidisti meó patri, Quí mihi pecúliaris dátus est ?

St. [Nodding assent and with a gesture toward Hegio] Huius fílius.

He. Víuitne is homo ?

St. Argéntum accepi, níl curauí céterum.

He. [To Philocrates] Quíd tu ais ?

Ph. Quin ístic ipsust Týndarus tuos fílius, 990 Vt quidem hic arguménta loquitur : nam ís mecum a pueró puer

- 15 Béne pudiceque éducatust úsque ad adulescéntiam.
He. Ét miser sum | ét fortunatús, si uera dícitis.
 Eó miser sum, quía male illi féci, si gnatúst meus.
 Éheu, quom | ego plús minusue féci quam me aequóm
 fuit. 995
 Quód male feci, crúciór: modo si inféctum fieri pós-siet!
 20 Séd éccum incedit húc ornatus haúd ex suis uirtútibus.

SCENE 4.

An affecting meeting takes place between Hegio and Tyndarus. Stalagmus comes to grief.

TYNDARVS. HEGIO. PHILOCRACTES. STALAGMVS.

[Tyndarus enters from the right, loaded down with chains and carrying a heavy pick-axe.]

- Ty.* Vídi ego multa saépe picta quae Ácherunti fíerent Crúciamenta: uérum ením uero núlla adaequest
 Ácheruns
 Átque ubi ego fui in lápicidinís: illic ibi demúmst locus, 1000
 Vbi labore lássitudost éxigunda ex córpore.
 5 Nam úbi illo adueni, quási patriciis púeris aut moné-rulae
 Aút anites aut cóturnices dántur quicum lúsitent, Ítidem mi haec aduénienti upupa quí me delectém datast.
 [Noticing the others] Séd erus eccum ante óstium: et erus álter eccum ex Álide 1005 Rédiit.
He. Salue, | éxoptate gnáte mi.

Ty. Hem, quid 'gnáte mi'?

10 Áttat, scio quor té patrem adsimulés esse et me
fílíum :

Quía mi item ut paréntes lucis dás tuendi cópiam.

Ph. Sálua, Tyndare.

Ty. Ét tu quoius caúsa hanc aerumnam éxigo

Ph. Át nunc liber ín diuitias fáxo uenies : nám tibi Páter hic est : hic séruos, qui te huic hínce quadrimum súrpuít, 1011

15 Véndidit patrí meo te séx minis. is té mihi
Páruolum pecúliarem páruolo pueró dedit.
Íllie indicium fécit : nam hunc ex Álide huc redúci-mus.

Ty. Quíd huius filium ?

Ph. Íntus eccum frátrem germanúm tuom. 1015

Ty. Quíd tu aís ? addúxtin illum huius † filium captiuom ?

20 Ph. Quín, inquam, intus híc est.

Ty. Fecisti édepol et recte ét bene.

Ph. Núnc tibi pater [pointing to Hegio] hic ést. hic [pointing to Stalagmus] fur est tuós qui paruom hinc te ábstulit.

Ty. Át ego hunc grandis grándem natu ob fúrtum ad car-nuficém dabo.

Ph. Méritus est.

Ty. † Ergo edepol méritam mercedém dabo. 1020 Séd dic, oro, páter meus tun és ?

He. Ego sum, gnáte mi.

25 Ty. Núnc demum in memóriam redeo — quóm mecum recógito —

Núnc edepol demum ín memoriam régregiōr audísse
me,

Quási per nebulam, Hégionem meúm patrem uocárier.

He. Ís ego sum.

Ph. Compédibus quæso ut tíbi sit leuior filius. 1025
 Átque hic grauior séruos.

He. Certumst princípìo id praeuórtier.

30 Eámus intro, ut árcessatur fáber, ut istas cómpedis
Tíbi adimam, huic dem.

St. Quóí peculi nil est, recte féceris.

[All the actors come forward.]

CATERVA.

Spéctatores, ád pudicos móres facta haec fábulast,
 Néque in hac subigitátiones súnť neque ulla amátio
 Néć pueri suppósitio nec árgénti circumdúctio, 1031 35 Néque ubi amans aduléscens scortum líberet clam suóm patrem.

Huíus modi paucás poetae réperiunt comoédias,
 Vbi boni melióres fiant. núnc uos, si uobís placet, Éť si placuimús neque odio fúimus, signum hoc míttite, 1035
 Quí pudicitiae ésse uoltis praémium: plausúm date.

ABBREVIATIONS.

A. & G., Allen and Greenough's Latin Grammar.

B., Bennett's Latin Grammar.

G.-L., The Gildersleeve-Lodge Latin Grammar.

H., The latest edition of Harkness's Latin Grammar.

NOTES.

PERSONAE.

THE early Greek comedy seldom employed more than three actors, but after the chorus was abolished this number was often exceeded. With the exception of the Cistellaria and the Stichus, the plays of Plautus always require at least four; those of Terence require at least five. In the Captives four actors are necessary; among these the parts might be distributed as follows:—

- (1) Hegio.
- (2) Philocrates, Aristophontes, puer.
- (3) Tyndarus, Philopolemus, the lorarius who speaks in Act I. Scene 2.
- (4) Ergasilus, Stalagmus, the lorarius who speaks in Act II. Scene 1, and Act III. Scene 5.

Besides these, supernumeraries would be necessary, e.g. in Act II. Scene 1.

The names in fabulae palliatae are commonly Greek names with Latin forms. Such names are usually chosen as will in themselves convey some idea of the characters to whom they belong. For instance, in the present play:—

Ergasilus indicates “the worker” (ἐργάζομαι), who “means business” and is not to be trifled with. The reader should picture him in the ordinary dress of a parasite, i.e. in black or gray garments of outlandish style, and whatever “extras” might add to his ridiculous appearance.

Hegio, “the prominent citizen,” “the leading man” of the place (cf. ἡγέομαι). This actor accordingly wears, with befitting dignity, the usual dress of a well-to-do Greek.

Philocrates, “fond of ruling.” Plautus himself probably spelled this name Pilocrates; see note on Talem in 274.

Aristophontes, “killer of chiefs.” For the Plautine spelling, see note on 274.

Philopolemus, “the lover of war” (φίλος, πόλεμος). For the Plautine spelling, see note on 274.

Stalagmus, “the dropper.”

ARGUMENTUM.

The argumenta prefixed to the plays of Plautus are not the productions of that poet, but were written in a later age, during a revival of interest in archaic Latin. See Introd. § 21. Such brief summaries were also written for other authors (e.g. for the different books of Vergil's Aeneid and for the plays of Terence, by Sulpicius Apollinaris in the second century A.D.), the prosody and the language of the author in hand being in each case carefully imitated.

1. captust : i.e. captus est ; final s after a short vowel was very faintly pronounced in early Latin. Captus est would therefore easily become captu' est and then (by prodelision) captust. With this disappearance of the initial e, compare, e.g. optumumst, for optumum est, in 10 ; domist for domi est, in 29 ; the English it's for it is, etc. On the position of captust, see Introd. § 99. Here captust sounds the keynote of the entire play, and accordingly takes the most prominent place for the verb. pugna Hegionis : probably not a case of hiatus. H seems to have been capable of preventing elision and of "making position" after a final consonant. See Introd. § 74.

2. seruos : for the form, see Introd. § 86 (a).

4. A word has apparently fallen out of this verse. See App. stuidens ut : one of the few instances in which studeo is followed by an ut-clause.

5. If the reading is correct, there is hiatus after inibi. filium : i.e. Tyndarus.

6. is : i.e. Tyndarus. suo : with synizesis, suō ; see Introd. § 78. uersa : i.e. mutata.

7. amittatur : here equivalent to dimittatur. See note on 36. The subject is dominus, i.e. Philocrates in the disguise of a slave. ipsus : for the classical ipse.

8. is : i.e. Philocrates. fugitiuom : see Introd. § 86 (a).

9. quouis : for the classical cuius ; Introd. § 86 (b). alium : i.e. Tyndarum ; alium is here equivalent to alterum.

PROLOGVS.

On the prologues to the plays of Plautus, see Introd. § 19.

The rôle of prologue seems to have been usually taken by one of the younger actors or by the manager of the company, who was attired for the occasion in a particular costume. While the whole burden of the prologues of Terence consists of answers to the unkind criticisms he received from his enemies, those to the plays of Plautus show a great variety of subject matter and commonly explain the plot of the play.

1. hos: this leads one to expect a verb to follow, of which it is to be the object or the subject-accusative, but the anacoluthon in the next verse leaves this pronoun without government. The accusative might however be explained by supposing it to be attracted to agree with quos.

2. Illi qui astant, — hi stant ambo, etc.: similar humor might be brought out in English: "Those bystanders there—they are standing, both of them—the 'standers' aren't seated." This good-natured attempt to cheat the spectators out of the interesting information the prologue had led them to believe was coming would in itself tend to put them in good humor. One might have expected i, instead of hi. See App. If the text is correct, there is hiatus after qui.

3. testes estis: equivalent to testamini; hence the infinitive loqui.

4. hic: with a gesture toward Hegio's house. huius: with a gesture toward Tyndarus.

5. suo sibi: the sibi intensifies the idea of suo, but at the same time lays stress upon the interests involved in the possession and in the general situation; ipsius might have taken the place of suo sibi, but that would have concerned itself only with the idea of possession.

6. operam datis: starts with the idea, put forth an effort; according to the application of this idea to various situations, it may be translated render service, take pains, or (as here) give attention.

8. alterum: to be pronounced altrúm; cf. such phenomena in English as "ev'ry," "quiv'ring," etc., for "every," "quivering," etc.: cf. also note on 306. The "iambic law" does not apply to such cases (see Introd. § 84), and the scansion áltérùm quod is not permissible.

seruos: nominative. The nominative and accusative singular of the second declension end in the earliest times in -os and -om. These endings became -us and -um toward the close of the third century B.C., except in words in which they were preceded by u (either vowel or consonant). See Introd. § 86 (a); cf. note on uiuont, 81. surpuit: by syncope, for surripuit.

9. eum: to be pronounced eúm. profugiens: the present participle here refers to an act prior to that of the principal verb; strictly, it should refer to an act going on at the time of the selling, but even Latin, and especially colloquial Latin, is sometimes inaccurate in its use of tenses. The lack of a perfect active participle is often responsible for such a use as this; accuracy is sacrificed in the interest of brevity. uendidit: for the long final syllable, see Introd. § 82 (e).

Alide: Alis is Doric for Elis. As Doric was the dialect of the Greeks in southern Italy, it is not strange that Doric forms were adopted into Latin.

10. patrī huiusce: the h apparently prevents elision here, as often. See Introd. § 74, and App. iam hoc tenetis: have you caught the idea? literally, have you already hold of this? (cf. the English slang, "catch on?"). The prologue takes an affirmative answer, on the part of the spectators, for granted, and expresses his satisfaction with their attention and interest by saying optumumst. At this point, however, for the purpose of stirring up his audience, he pretends to see some one at a distance from the stage waggishly shaking his head, or giving some other indication of dissent. What is said in lines 11-16 must not be taken too seriously; the prologue is too good-natured, and too desirous of putting his hearers in good humor, to lose his temper easily. optumumst: very well. For the loss of initial e in est, see note on captust in verse 1 of the Argumentum. But see App. The forms optimus, maximus, etc., began to replace the early forms optumus, maxumus, etc., toward the end of the Republic.

11. This verse can be read metrically only by admitting hiatus between hercle and ille, and again between ille and ultumus, and by treating the final syllable of ultumus as long. The first hiatus might be obviated by treating the final syllable of negat as long. The verse is probably corrupt. hercle: confound him! ultumus: some one in the edge of the crowd. For the form, see note on optumum in 10. accedito: the future imperative is commonly used only when a distinct interval is supposed to elapse before the command is to take effect or to be obeyed; hence its use in laws, maxims, recipes, etc. Sometimes (and apparently in the present passage) it is used in a command that is intended to be obeyed as soon as uttered. Abscedito would seem to make better sense, and is actually adopted by some editors.

12. si non ubi, etc.: as no one makes a move in obedience to his accedito, the prologue changes his tone somewhat; if the fellow cannot find a seat and behave himself, he may "take a walk" (outside, of course). ubi sedeas, ubi ambules: to sit, to walk; literally, where you may sit, where you may walk — volitive characterizing clauses. The following sorts of characterizing clauses should be noted: —

1. Predicating a hypothetical case: is est qui mentiatur, he is a man who would cheat. In a clause of this type, the subjunctive has the same force as in an independent paratactical clause; e.g. is mentiatur, he would cheat.

2. Predicating an act actually performed, or a state actually existing (a type developed from 1):<sup>1</sup> is est qui mentiatur, he is a man who cheats. Sometimes such a clause is used of the future; e.g. 613, garriet quoi neque pes neque caput compareat, he will rattle off something, to which there will appear neither head nor tail.

3. Predicating obligation or propriety (a type probably also developed from 1): nihil ego uideo quod gaudeas, I see nothing that you should (ought to) rejoice over.

4. Volitive. The relative clause, besides characterizing the antecedent, may at the same time express the purpose of the act of the principal clause, as in the English sentence, "Men are trying to make machines that shall<sup>2</sup> fly"; here the flying of the machines is the act which the men purpose to bring about, and at the same time the flying is to characterize the machines — they are to be flying machines. Cf. Tac. Dial, 28. 6, cuius . . . committeretur.

Another type of volitive characterizing clause is represented by hic est locus ubi sedeas, which may have originated in some such paratactic use as hic est locus; hic sedeas (here is a place; sit here, if you like), where sedeas would be a weak jussive subjunctive, expressing mere permission.

13. mendicariet: play the beggar, i.e. by asking favors of you, by making personal entreaties, which the actor regards as beneath his dignity. The passive infinitive in -ier, for the classical -i, is very common in early Latin, especially at the end of a verse.

14. ego me tua: the juxtaposition of these pronouns heightens the emphasis (see Introd. § 99) and the swaggering tone: I am not going to burst myself for you — don't fool yourself. tua: to be read tūa or tūā; see Introd. §§ 78 and 84. ne erres: see translation in the preceding note. Perhaps, however, this clause denotes negative purpose. rupturus: for rumpo and dirumpo in this sense, cf. Plaut. Cas. 809; Poen. 540; Merc. 138; Ter. Hec. 435; Cic. ad fam. VII. 1. 4; Hor. Ep. I. 19. 5.

15. qui potestis ope uostra censerier: who can claim a place among men of means; literally, who can be rated by your wealth.

<sup>1</sup> This is the type of clause commonly designated as the "Clause of Characteristic."

<sup>2</sup> "Shall" is used here to indicate the determination of the men; "will" would indicate mere futurity without connoting any other idea.

The reference is to the list of citizens prepared by the censor. Opposite the name of each citizen information was given regarding his wealth. Those who were here recorded as having property were said to be opibus censi, rated according to wealth; those who had no property were merely capite censi. In 194 B.C. the part of the auditorium near the stage was reserved for the senators; later, places behind the senators were similarly reserved for the equites. Even before 194, however, it is probable that the wealthier class, as a rule, found places near the stage. The words here quoted imply a slur, that the fellow does not belong to the same class as "the rest of you, gentlemen." ope: rare for opibus; cf. Ennius, quoted in Cic. Tusc. Disp. III. 19. 44, ope barbarica; Verg. Aen. VIII. 685.

16. accipite relicuom: receive the balance due, a phrase taken from the language of accounts, here of course referring to the rest of the argument. relicuom: quadrisyllabic in early Latin. See note on seruos, 8. alieno uti nil moror: I don't care about being in debt; alieno (sc. aere) uti literally means to be using another's money. Nihil morari starts with the idea to make no delay about; according to the application of this idea, it may mean (1) to have no liking for, to dislike, to be averse to, as here and Plaut. Most. 830; Cas. 748, etc.; (2) to feel indifferent about, not to object to, as in Verg. Aen. II. 365; et esse nil moror, I do not care if I am; Liv. III. 54, nihil . . . moror quominus abeam, I do not object to leaving. nil: accusative of the "result produced" (the "inner object"). A. 238; B. 176. 2; G.-L. 333 and 329 note; H. 409. 1. See note on quippiam, 127.

17. dixeram: had said, i.e. prior to the interruption; dixi might seem to us more natural, but the pluperfect in such cases is never equivalent to the perfect; see Introd. § 95 (c).

18. dominum: i.e. the son of his master.

19. is: i.e. Theodoromedes, to whom he sold him. gnato: in the majority of cases, gnatus seems to be the form of the substantive in early Latin, natus that of the participle; but see 891.

20. quasi una: about the same; for quasi in this sense, cf. Plaut. Most. 617; Ter. Heaut. 145; Cic. Verr. I. 8.

21. suo: sûo; see Introd. § 78.

22. enim uero: in early Latin the use of enim differs in two respects from its use in classical times, viz.: (1) it is not necessarily post-positive; enim uero came later to be fused into a single word enimvero, which, standing as it commonly does at the beginning of its sentence, forms a reminiscence in classical times of this earlier use; (2) enim is commonly used, as here, in the sense of indeed; this use is not uncommon even in the best classical prose. pilas : playthings ; literally, balls. habent : use, treat.

23. quomodo . . . amiserit : instead of this, we might have had qua amisit.

24. Postquam belligerant : A. and G. 324 ; B. 287. a ; G.-L. 561 ; H. 602. cum | Aleis : for the hiatus, see Introd. § 85.

25. fit : the original length of the vowel was frequently preserved in early Latin ; in the classical period we should expect fīt ; see Introd. § 82 (e).

27. coepit : he began to ; the position of the verb (see Introd. § 99) seems to indicate that the necessity for continuing the traffic was of short duration. hic : i.e. Hegio.

28. si quem . . . posset : (to see) if or whether ; si, like the English "if," frequently introduces an indirect question ; cf. Verg. Aen. I. 181 ; Dryden, "uncertain if by augury or chance." qui : a form (especially common in early Latin) of the ablative or instrumental, used of any gender or number. It may be used :—

- (1) for the usual ablative quo (as here) or qua ; cf. verse 101 ;
- (2) as an interrogative adverb, how ? why ? ;
- (3) as an indefinite particle, anyhow ;
- (4) to introduce a curse (with this use, cf. ut (utinam), which, from an adverb of manner, came to introduce a wish) ;
- (5) as an intensive particle (see notes on 243 and 553), surely.

qui : though this here refers to a person, the same construction is allowed as when the reference is to an inanimate thing. qui mutet suom : to exchange for his son ; literally, through whom he might receive his son in exchange. Mutare may take either (1) the accusative of the thing received in exchange and the ablative of the thing given, or (2) the accusative of the thing given in exchange and the ablative of the thing received. mutet : we should expect mutaret after the imperfect posset.

29. domist : for the loss of the e, see note on captust in line 1 of the argumentum.

30. indaudiuit : got an inkling ; for the old forms (ind and indu) of the preposition in, cf. ind-ipiscor, ind-uo, indu-perator (= imperator), ind-igeo, indi-genus, ind-oles, indu-gredior (Lucretius). de summo loco, etc. : the prepositional phrases that are most frequently used to modify substantives are those formed by de and ex. loco : station.

31. genere : birth. equitem | Aleum : for the hiatus, see Introd. § 85.

32. nil: see references in note on nil in 16, and quippiam in 127. nil . . . parsit . . . dum parceret: he was not saving of his money, if only he might save his son (Sonnenschein), i.e. he spent money freely in the hope of recovering his son; B. 310. I. parsit: regularly in Plautus, and often in Terence, for pepercit.

33. reconciliare: originally meant to bring together again; then it came to be used, as in the present passage, of only one of the parties to be brought together, in the sense of to bring back. This latter meaning, however, is confined to early Latin.

34. emīt: the length of the final syllable may be due to the following h, but not necessarily, as the vowel was originally long and this quantity is occasionally retained; see Introd. § 74. de quaestoribus: although fabulae palliatae are, generally speaking, distinctly Greek in coloring, allusions to Roman life are frequent in Plautus, and are found occasionally in Terence. Here (though it must be remembered that the prologue may not have been written by Plautus) there is a distinct allusion to the Roman quaestores, the officers who had charge of the financial affairs of Rome and accordingly of the disposition of the booty and the prisoners taken in war.

35. hisce: an old form of the nominative plural (see Introd. § 87 (a)). In early inscriptions the nominative plural of o-stems frequently ends in -eis (-is), e.g. heis, magistreis, publiceis, uireis. Hisce shows this early -s, the -ce being merely the strengthening demonstrative particle seen in hic (for hice), illic, etc. Cf. illisce in Most. 499. hunc . . . dolum: i.e. the one already made clear to the audience by the appearance of the captives and what has been said of them.

36. quo pacto . . . amittat: a purpose clause (not an indirect question). amittat: very frequent in early Latin in its etymological sense, to send away (a, mitto). This original meaning weakened to let get away (unintentionally), i.e. to lose, its regular meaning in classical Latin and one not unusual even in Plautus, e.g. lines 23, 143, etc.

38. illic: for ille, see Introd. § 87 (b). For the c, compare the c in hic and see note on hisce, 35.

39. huius: huius; see Introd. § 79. illic: this is probably to be pronounced here as a monosyllable ilic; see Introd. § 83, and App. illius: illiūs. fert imaginem: is disguised as; literally, bears the likeness.

40. hic: regularly short in early Latin. expediet: will set on foot, work out; expedire literally meaning to get the feet out (ex, pes).

42. eodem : with synizesis, eodem. pacto : stroke. suom : emphasized by its position (see Introd. § 99) to indicate the unexpected result of their scheme.

43. reducem . . . faciet : will restore ; the expression differs from reducere in bringing into greater prominence the resulting state.

44. inprudens : unawares, i.e. without realizing that he was doing so ; inprudens (inprovidens) literally means unforeseeing.

45. insciens : for the classical insciis. quis : a person, many a one. prudens : intentionally, though prudens was felt by the Romans as an adjective, attributing a characteristic.

46. sua sibi : the juxtaposition produces emphasis ; see Introd. § 99.

48. de sua sententia : by their own wits, a special application of the general idea in sententia, viz. way of thinking.

49. ad : for the usual apud ; cf. 699 ; Cas. 192, ad mulieres ; Stich. 439, ad Sagarinum ; Poen. 726, ad praetorem ; Ter. Heaut. 979, ad sororem ; Andr. 728, ad erum ; Cic. ad Att. X. 16. 1, ad me ; pro Lig. 10. 30, ad parentem ; Liv. VII. 7, ad bellum.

51. homunculi quanti sunt : poor weak mortals — what insignificant things they are! Notice the force of the position of homunculi (see Introd. § 99), and the force of the diminutive form. quanti : though quantus is commonly translated by how great, it strictly refers merely to size in general. Its meaning therefore covers the whole range of ideas between how very small and how very great, including both of these extremes. quom : always thus spelled till after Plautus and Terence. The form cum began to be used toward the end of the republican period, but quum is not found till five and a half centuries later. recogito : the re- seems to imply a return to previous thoughts.

52. res : plot, but with a play on the other meaning of res, viz. reality as contrasted with fiction. res . . . nobis, uobis fabula : i.e. this res (plot) will now be acted by us — res (reality), did I say ? Yes, a res (reality) indeed for us actors, but for you a fabula (a mere play, an entertaining fiction). nobis : felt as a dative of agent with agetur and at the same time a dative of interest (reference) corresponding to the following uobis. The “dative of agent” is only a dative of interest specialized in its application. In agetur nobis, the only idea, strictly speaking, expressed by the dative is that of interest in the act of agetur. When the context, as here, shows that the particular interest felt by the persons referred to in nobis is that of the performers of the act, then nobis may be translated by us. fabula : (from fari) first meant talk about something, a story ; then a special kind of story, viz. a drama; sometimes mere talk, fiction. Here two meanings are in mind: (1) a drama with reference to agetur nobis; (2) a fiction in contrast with res (reality).

53. uos quod monitos uoluerim: which I have wanted you advised of. The subjunctive uoluerim is due to the fact that it stands in a clause of characteristic. It is not a subjunctive of "contingent futurity," meaning I should like. See App. uos quod: A. & G. 238. b; B. 178. 1. d; G.-L. 333. 1; H. 412. monitos: monere starts with the idea to bring to the mind; according to the character of what is thus brought to the mind, the verb may be translated by inform, advise, warn. For a transition from the idea of "advise" to that of "inform," cf. "advise of" (in the sense of "inform"), where the idea of giving advice is no longer present.

54. operam dare: see note on 6.

55. pertractate: in the ordinary hackneyed manner, pertractus meaning literally much (thoroughly) handled. Pertractate is elsewhere used only in a good sense, elaborately, etc. See App.

56. uorsus: frequent in early Latin for uersus; cf. uoster for uester, uortex for vertex, etc. immemorabiles: not to be repeated. Adjectives in -bilis commonly denote capacity or ability in a passive sense, but "can not be" easily merges into "ought not to be," and this latter idea is the predominant one here in immemorabiles. Cf. our phrase "not to be avoided," which may mean: (1) "cannot be avoided"; (2) "ought not to be avoided."

57-58. leno, meretrix, miles gloriosus: stock characters in the plays of Plautus.

58. ne uereamini: Sonnenschein compares the words of Bottom (Midsummer Night's Dream, Act III. Scene 1):—

"Fair ladies, I would entreat you not to fear . . . if you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life," etc.

60. fōris illic: for the shortening of the -is, see Introd. § 84.

61. paene iniquomst: (that we should all of a sudden attempt to act a tragedy, etc.) is hardly a fair thing to ask (and therefore of course you will not expect it). Cf. longum est, it's a long story (and so I will not trouble you with it). In English one would be more likely to say "it would be hardly fair," "it would be a long story," but one must not suppose that the Romans felt iniquomst and longum est as equivalent to iniquom sit and longum sit. The indicative est in such phrases was felt to have the ordinary meaning of that mood. In the few cases like si alia memorem . . ., morast (906), i.e. forthwith time is lost, the indicative is purely rhetorical, and may be compared with such English uses as "If you should do that, I am forthwith ruined" (instead of "I should be ruined"). comico choragio: with an equipment intended only for comedy.

62. desubito: similar in make-up to the English "of a sudden." Cf. derepente for the classical repente. tragoediam: another Roman allusion (see note on 34), viz. to the fabula praetexta, a type of tragedy that was purely Roman in character. No other type of tragedy, either Greek or Roman, ever represented battles upon the stage. See Hor. Ep. II. 1. 189 ff., and Cic. ad fam. VII. 1. 2.

63. litis contrahat: let him get up a quarrel, i.e. with me, by disturbing the performance.

64. ualentiores nactus aduersarium: these words are the all-important ones (hence the position before si; see Introd. § 99), containing the point of the good-natured threat. The aduorsarium is the speaker himself, and the meaning is: If the fellow finds me too much for him, I'll show him a fight that will not be good for him. aduorsarium: for this spelling, see note on 56.

65. inspectet: this word is commonly used of a passive observer, and so here adds to the humor of the picture: the speaker proposes to "do him up" so promptly that the other will have no chance to take part in the fight further than to see how it is done. All this is of course good-natured raillery, calculated to put the spectators in good spirits.

66. I.e. he will never want to see another.

67. iudices iustissimi: kind critics (Lindsay). For the spelling in iustissimi, see note on optimum in 10.

67-68. Notice the effective chiasmus in these two verses.

68. duelli . . . duellatores: for the later belli, bellatores; duonorum is found in early Latin for bonorum, Duellona for Bellona, duis for bis, etc.; bellum (duellum) comes from duo, and indicates a state of "twoness," i.e. lack of unity; cf. German Zwist from zwei. optumi: for the spelling, see note on 10.

ACT I. SCENE 1.

69. Scorto: for the construction, see A. and G. 231. b; B. 190. 1; G.-L. 349. Rem. 5; H. 430. 1.

70. eo: for the following reason; eo here is to be pronounced eo. inuocatus: a play is intended upon the two meanings of this word, which is to be understood in the sense of uninvited (in + uocatus), with reference to the parasite, and in that of called upon, implored (participle of inuocare), with reference to the scortum.

71. absurde dictum : i.e. that it is a poor attempt at jesting, without any point. derisores : my brother jesters, i.e. those who, like himself, got a living by their jesting.

72. recte (sc. dictum) : right to the point. scortum : notice the position of this word (see Introd. § 99) : it is his scortum that the lover calls upon — his scortum, I repeat. See App.

73. talos quom iacit : playing with dice was a favorite pastime among both Greeks and Romans. The lover is here represented as calling upon his mistress instead of upon a deity to bring him a lucky throw. For the two kinds of dice, see dictionaries under tali (ἀσπράγαλοι) and tesserae (κύβοι). scortum : an effective repetition; see the note on 72 ; see also App.

74. inuocatum : still playing upon the two meanings of the word. This verse is incomplete. See App.

75. planius : sc. inuocati sumus.

76. Parasites are constantly complaining of the "cold, cold world," where invitations to dinner are so very few.

77 ff. See App.

78. ubi res prolatae sunt : when business is suspended (carried forward). Public business was suspended during the public games, during the heat of summer and on certain other special occasions.

80. quasi : in the sense of sicut. caletur : for the classical calet.

81. suo sibi : see note on 5. uiuont : for the later uiuunt ; see Introd. § 86 (α). The third person plural in early times had -ont for the later -unt, e.g. cosentiont (C.I.L. I. 32), sont (C.I.L. I. 1166). Wherever this early -ont followed u (either vowel or consonantal) the original o was retained till Augustan times and in many cases till even later. Thus, long after such forms as consentiont and sont became consentiunt and sunt, such forms as relinquont, sequontur continued to be used. ros si non cadit : on the place best adapted to snails, Varro (de re rust. III. 17) says : locus est melior quem et non coquit sol et tangit ros, etc.

83. in òccúlto : for the shortening, see Introd. § 84. miseri : poor fellows. The force of the position of this word should be brought out in translating ; see Introd. § 99. uicitant : the force of the frequentative seems to be keep living along.

84. rurant : specially coined, apparently, to gain assonance with ruri ; the usual word would be rusticantur. homines quos ligur- riant : men for them to feed upon, not the men whom they feed upon, an idea which would call for the indicative.

85. uenatici (sc. canes): i.e., because they are always lean and hungry. See App.

86. redierunt : sc. res. molossici : a choice breed of hounds from Epirus, greatly prized as watch and shepherd dogs and as household pets, corresponding in some respects to our Newfoundlands or St. Bernards; they were large and proverbially ravenous. molossici, odiosici, . . . incommodestici : humorously formed from molossus, odiosus, and incommodus, to correspond with uenatici, as if indicating other breeds. Lindsay brings out the coloring by translating the last two words by dear-hounds and bore-hounds, though the clever pun is a touch not found in the Latin.

87. multum : very; such adverbs formed in their origin an accusative construction, perhaps akin to the accusative of extent, and meaning to a high degree, to a great extent; cf. the similar English use of "much" in "much amused," etc.

88. hic : i.e. at Calydon. nisi qui : unless any. colaphos : cuffs. Plautus himself wrote colapos. There were originally no aspirates in Latin, the Greek  $\phi$ ,  $\chi$ , and  $\theta$  being represented in transcriptions from that language by p, c, and t; ph, th, and ch did not begin to be used till about 100 B.C. This is clearly shown in early Latin inscriptions. See the pun Thalem . . . talento in 274 and note thereon. perpeti : the per seems to add the idea of to the end, implying that the "cuffs" might always be expected.

89. aulas : the early form of olla; cf. plaustrum, Claudius for plostrum, Clodius.

90. uel : even, to be understood not merely with extra portam, but with all that follows; he may even have to work for a living (for aught anybody cares). ire : see Introd. § 84. See App. portam trigeminam : another purely Roman allusion; see note on quaestoribus, 34, which contrasts strangely with Aetolia haec est in 94. The porta trigemina (so called from its three archways) was a gate situated between the Tiber and the Aventine Hill and opening into the road to Ostia. The point of the present passage is probably that day-laborers here found plenty of work in handling grain and other imports. ad saccum : saccus is a general word for bag, and here probably refers to the bags of grain, the carrying of which would form one of the principal occupations of the laborers engaged extra portam trigeminam. One is tempted to understand it as referring to a beggar's wallet (cf. Trin. 423), but there is no parallel for saccus in this sense; when saccus means money-bag, it stands for wealth instead of beggary. licet: i.e. he may take to day-labor.

91. mihi ne: note the emphatic position of mihi (see Introd. § 99).

92. meus: mēus. rex: patron, as often; cf. 825; Asin. 919; Stich. 454; Ter. Phorm. 338, etc.; βασιλεὺς is similarly used in Greek comedy. est potitus hostium: fell into the hands of the enemy; literally, was brought into the power of the enemy, the genitive depending upon the idea of potestas (or some similar substantive) implied in the verb. Est potitus hostium is merely the passive form of the construction seen in Amph. 178, eum potivit pater Seruitutis, the father brought him into the power of Seruitus (i.e. reduced him to slavery), which would in the passive have been is potitus est a patre Seruitutis; cf. Capt. 144, 762; Epid. 562, hostium est potita; Lucr. IV. 766.

93. ita: i.e. with such deplorable results. See App.

94. illic: probably this should be pronounced illic; see note on 39. capt(us): the final syllable should probably be elided before the following vowel, as Plautus does not commonly allow either short syllable of a resolved long to end a word of more than one syllable. See App.; also notes on 466, 532, and App. thereon. in Alid: an explanation of illic.

96. quae aedes: the antecedent aedes, which would be in apposition with the substantive implied in hic, is here (as often) drawn into the relative clause, which house for a house which. lamentariae: occurs only here.

98. nunc: the sentence begun in 92 (postquam meus rex, etc.) is left unfinished. This is probably not due so much to the poet's carelessness as to an attempt to imitate the style of daily conversation. hic: apparently an early instance of long i in this word; it is regularly short in Plautus. See App. occepit: an early compound replaced in classical times by incipio.

99. inhonestum: slave dealers were, as a class, despised. Very respectable Romans, however (e.g. Cato the Elder), seem sometimes to have speculated in slaves; see Plut. Cato Maior, 21.

100. si queat: see note on 28.

101. qui mutet: see note on 28.

102-107. See App.

102. quod quidem ego nimis quam cupio: notice the emphatic touches at every point, the quidem (underscoring the quod), the ego, the nimis quam (indicating excess), cupio (of passionate longing): and this is what I at any rate am mighty anxious to have him accom- plish. nimis quam cupio : seems to be a fusion of two expressions, nimis cupio and quam cupio (how I long). Perhaps, however, quam is to be regarded as modifying nimis, in which case nimis quam would mean how exceedingly; cf. Truc. 469, nimis quam paucae; Most. 1123, nimis quam catus. This verse is incomplete metrically; see App.

103. recipit : get back; in colloquial language, the present is sometimes loosely used where strict accuracy would require the future or future-perfect. nil est quo me recipiam : there's no way for me to get back, literally, there is nothing to which (whither) I may betake myself. Quo me recipiam is a volitive characterizing clause. See note on 12.

104. This verse can not be read metrically and is probably corrupt. iuuentutis : from the young men. sese (emphatic for se) : no one but themselves. omnis : in early Latin the nominative plural of i-stems often ends, as the accusative regularly does, in -īs. Later, -es is the only form of the nominative; even in the accusative, the -es of consonant stems gradually encroaches upon the original -īs, and by the close of the Augustan period has driven it out almost entirely, the principal exception after that time being omnīs.

105. ill(e) demum : but there's a young man who; literally, he at length, etc. Demum is often best translated by laying emphasis upon the word it immediately follows, which is commonly a pronoun or an adverb. The e of ille was probably silent in such cases; see Introd. § 77. antiquis : good old; antiquis commonly refers to something that has long since passed away.

106. quōiūs : quōiūs became cuius about the beginning of the Ciceronian period. Quoi seems to have been retained till much later, to avoid confusion between cui and qui (see Quintil. I. 7. 27). See Introd. § 86 (b). uoltum : see note on 8. gratiis : for nothing, unrewarded; gratiis was originally an ablative of cause, meaning out of kindness or favor, i.e. without reward, in which sense it came to be felt as an adverb (sometimes, though not in Plautus or Terence, contracted to gratis, cf. dis for diis).

107. condigne . . . eiūs moratus moribus : endowed with the same worthy character as he, literally, very (con-) worthily characterized by his (i.e. the young man's) character; eiūs is probably felt as modifying both pater and moribus; when a word is thus used to modify two words, its normal position is, as here, between the two words.

109. und(e) : for the silent e, see Introd. § 77. saturitate : with gorging. saepe ego : many a time I (too), the emphatic ego implying vain regret for the "good old days." ebrius: the saturitate (from satur, sated with food), occupying the first place in the clause (see Introd. § 99), has already done justice to the memories of the good things he had to eat; at an equally emphatic place in the sentence, ebrius lingers over memories of the all-too-tempting drinks. The dependence of saturitate upon ebrius is incongruous, and for that reason humorous; his condition at such times was the result of both food and drink, and he wished to give full credit to the merits of each.

ACT I. SCENE 2.

For the general make-up of Hegio and Ergasilus, see p. 63.

110. Notice the anapaestic word in the second foot — a comparatively rare phenomenon in the second foot of an iambic senarius; cf. Pers. III. 1; Pseud. III. 2. 19; Merc. IV. 3. 29; etc. sis: si vis; cf. sultis for si uoltis (uultis) in 456. tu: emphatic: you, I mean, riveting the attention of the person addressed and fixing the responsibility. istos: those in your charge; the accusative by attraction (cf. hos in 1).

111. de quaestoribus: see note on 34. See App.

112. his: see App. indito: see note on 11. singularias: the use of iuncti instead of uincti, in 113, shows that the two captives were bound together, and makes it probable that singularias means separate, i.e. one for each, instead of the heavier (maiores) chains which were used for the two together. This would allow the captives greater freedom of movement, and the order would be in harmony with that in the next line. This word seems extremely rare in any sense.

113. For the punctuation, see App. sunt iuncti: sunt alone is the verb, iuncti expressing the state in which they are.

114. si . . . si: for the later sive . . . sive; cf. si . . . sive in Trin. 183. foris: outside; originally an ablative of place where, to which corresponded foras (forth out of doors), as an accusative of end of motion.

115. uti: for the later ut; a reminiscence of the earlier form is found in utinam. uti adseruentur: ut seems sometimes to introduce a jussive subjunctive, just as it often does an optative; cf. 794; Trin. 349; Curc. 257; operam ut det. Such subjunctives are commonly explained by assuming the ellipsis of uide, or some similar expression, but such an assumption often seems unnatural.

116. liber captiuos auis ferae consimilis: (chiasmus) a captive free is, etc., i.e. he is away in a twinkling and you can never catch him again. consimilis: similis takes the genitive in early Latin, the dative (commonly) in post-Augustan Latin. The intervening period is one of transition, in which both the genitive and the dative are frequent.

117. semel: emphatic position.

118. postilla: after that, formed like postea, and differing from it in meaning, as ille differs from is. possis: you would never be able, i.e. no matter how much you should try; "you can" would be potes.

120. uidere: i.e. uideris. ita: equivalent to liber lubentius esse quam seruire, depending upon uidere, referring to the preceding verbs in 118-119. non uidere ita tu quidem: the position of tu with its intensifying quidem indicates an impatient, spiteful tone. Hegio says that the lorarius does not act as though he cared about being free; if he did, he would try to be a better slave. Slaves were sometimes manumitted from motives of kindness or gratitude; sometimes they purchased their freedom from what they had saved (peculium) out of their allowance.

120-121. See App.

121. quod dem: (anything) for me to give, literally, (anything) which I may give, a volitive characterizing clause (see note on 12). mene: -ne in early, as in classical, Latin is non-committal. Sometimes the answer "yes" is expected, sometimes, as here and in 121, the answer "no," but in neither case is the answer suggested by the form of the question, but rather by external circumstances. In such cases the use of -ne, instead of nonne or num, produces a certain rhetorical effect, the implication being that the answer may safely be left to be inferred. Cf. "Do I, or do I not, look like an honest man?" Sometimes necne is actually added, as in 713, emitteresne necne? See App. uis dem: the subjunctive in such cases probably originated in a deliberative question; uis? dem? In the course of time dem came to be looked upon as depending upon uis. The next step would be the insertion of a word that would show this dependence, e.g. uis ut dem? but this use of ut always remained rare. The play of words in this line should be noticed: if I have nothing (else) to give (for my freedom), do you want me to give you — the slip myself? With the expression me dem in pedes, cf. me contuli in pedes (Bacch. 374), se in pedes conicere (Ter. Phorm. 190), in uiam se dare (Cic. ad fam. XIV. 12), and the English expression "take to one's heels."

122. erit extemplo: the emphatic position chosen for erit heightens the contrast with the non est of the preceding verse and intensifies the threatening tone: there soon will be something that I'll give to you.

quod dem tibi: a predicating characterizing clause referring to the future (see note on 12); notice the emphatic position of tibi (see the translation given above, and Introd. § 99).

123. me: the position of me, coming between avis and ferae, attracts attention (see Introd. § 99), (instead of one of these captives) I'll be the one to make myself like the wild bird you talk about (viz. in 116).

124. ita ut dicis: i.e. very well, then — I'll treat you accordingly; I'll cage you. faxis: archaic for feceris. dabo: will put; there were apparently two distinct verbs with the form do (infinitive, dare), one cognate with δίδωμι and meaning to give, the other cognate with τίθημι and meaning to put. The two verbs seem to have been sometimes confused even by the Romans, but instances of the latter verb seem to occur, especially in compounds: e.g. here; Capt. 797, ad terram dabo; Ter. And. 1. 3. 9, praecipitem me in pistrinum dabit; such expressions as in fugam dare, aliquem in vincula dare, etc., and in the compounds abdo, to put away; condo, to put together.

125. cura atque abi: hysteron proteron; we should expect abi atque cura, go and attend to, instead of cura atque abi.

127. uisam ne: I'll go see, lest, the ne-clause depending upon the implied idea of fear; cf. Aul. 39, aurum inspicere uolt ne subreptum siet; Pers. 77, uisam nequis obreptaerit. quippiam turbauerint: have made any disturbance, the quippiam to be taken as the inner object. Cf. notes on nīl in 16 and 32.

128. ind(e) mē: for the pronunciation and scansion of inde and certain other particles in such cases, see Introd. § 77.

129. aegrest: it pains me; literally, it is with annoyance; male and bene are other adverbs frequently used as modifiers of esse; cf. 273, 639, 701, 706, 754, and such English expressions as “it is well” (though “well” is here sometimes regarded as an adjective), “it is with difficulty.”

facere quaestum carcerarium: is following the jailer's trade; facere is frequently used of following a profession; e.g. carnificinam facere (132), facere piraticam (Cic. post red. in sen. 5), facere mercaturas (Cic. ad Quint. fr. III. 1. 2), etc.

130. gnati miseriam: sorrow for his son, the genitive being objective; for the form of gnati, see note on 19. miserum senem: in an emphatic position (see Introd. § 99), taking up again, as a sort of afterthought, the preceding hunc: poor old fellow, though this translation misses the echo of miseriam still sounding in miserum.

131. huc conciliari: conciliare, originally meaning to bring together two or more things, came to be used, as here, in the sense to bring (one thing) to (another, or to a place). See note on reconciliare in 33.

132. uel: even.

133. quīs hīc lōquitur: for the shortening, see Intro. § 84.

133-134. tuo maerore maceror, macesco, consenesco et tabesco: notice the alliteration and assonance, producing somewhat the same effect as: it is I, who, at thy sorrow, suffer, sadden, decline, and pine.

134. et: here adding the last of a series, a rare use of et, but one found in Pseud. 44; Curc. 37; 283; Trin. 273, and elsewhere.

135. ossa atque pellis: where we say skin and bones.

136-137. See App.

137. foris: away from home, has an emphatic position (see Intro. § 99) contrasting strongly with the domi; what he gets at home doesn't go far, and it costs something, but the little bit that he sponges from others—that's the taste that does him good. See note on 114.

138. salue: greetings to you; the expression is, like our "good morning" and "good afternoon," used either at meeting or at parting.

139. ego illum: i.e. I of all men, him my best friend. egone: for the non-committal force of -ne see note on 121. non fleam: a rhetorical question of obligation or propriety, should I not weep for? equivalent to the statement surely I ought to weep for (see note on 208). There is no such thing in Latin as a negative question of deliberation, corresponding to μή with the subjunctive in Greek, though such a use is commonly recognized in Latin grammars. See App. defleam: weep my eyes out for.

140. semper sensi: in an emphatic position, always did feel.

142. tum denique: then and not till then. intelligimus: understand, i.e. appreciate.

144. tuos. potitust: see note on captust in Argumentum, 1. hostium: see note on 92.

145. expertus quanti fuerit: serves the purpose of an adverb modifying desidero: with a full sense of what I have lost; literally, it is after finding out how much he was to me (that I am now missing him). quanti: A. & G. 252. a; B. 203. 3; G.-L. 380; II. 448. 1. desidero: commonly used of a desire for something once possessed, but possessed no longer, miss.

146. alienus: in emphatic position, mere stranger (outsider) as you are. quom eius: to be read qu(om) eius. quom . . . feras: a rare construction in Plautus, who, even in causal and adversative clauses, regularly uses the indicative with quom. The subjunctive constructions with quom (cum) represent a comparatively late growth (the indicative being the rule even in Terence), due to the influence of the subjunctive qui-clauses, quom itself being a relative (from the same root as qui) with some form of tempus understood as its antecedent. For quom with the indicative, see Cist. 115, sine trahi, quom egomet trahor; Amph. 753, tu quoque etiam insanis, quom id me interrogas; 1134, quom sum Iuppiter; Capt. 216, 280, 423, etc. Even praesertim quom takes the indicative, e.g. Asin. 80. The subjunctive in the present passage may be due to the dependence of the quom-clause upon an infinitive.

147. par : originally equal, then equal to the requirements of the case, i.e. suitable, proper, natural (as here). quoi : see note on 106.

148. aha, Hegio : for the non-elision, see Introd. § 74, and cf. 85 f. See App.

149. dixis . . . induxis : for the more common dixeris, induxeris (see note on 124). Such archaic subjunctive forms are used only with future meanings; they never refer to the past as forms like dixeris, induxeris, etc., frequently do (e.g. in result clauses). animum induxis : the two words are felt as constituting a single verbal conception (bring the mind to, i.e. resolve upon, or think) and as such may take a direct object; here istuc is the object of animum induxis, as well as of dixis. Cf. animum advertere and animum attendere, expressions which were similarly used with a direct object and the former of which was ultimately fused into a single word, animadvertere. tuom : see note on servos in 8.

151. malum : in an emphatic position; one might be expected to interest himself in a friend's prosperity, but his misfortune — you stand by him even in that. quom : commonly interpreted as causal, in which use it regularly takes the indicative in Plautus (see note on 146). It is possible, however, that quom is here equivalent to an explicative quod, that, the fact that. This use was entirely distinct, in both origin and development, from the temporal or causal quom (cum) and was always associated with the indicative. It is very common in early Latin and is not infrequent in classical times, especially after such expressions as gratulator, gratias ago, etc. See App. If the quom in this passage is explicative, the quom-clause will here be the direct object of laudo : I commend your making your friend's misfortune your own. The common interpretation makes it necessary to supply an object for laudo.

152-167. See App.

152. nunc : i.e. his present plans for recovering his son promise success. ehcu : for the hiatus, see Introd. § 85 f. Here, again, h prevents elision. huic : referring to himself, just as a Southern negress frequently refers to herself as "dis po' chile." dolet : is the trouble with.

153. quia : explicative, the fact that, the clause being in apposition with illud ; this use of quia is common in Plautus, though in classical times it gave place to quod and cum (see latter part of note on quom in 151) ; cf. 203, nos pudet quia . . . ; Epid. 107, idne pudet te quia . . . ; Cas. 378, iniquomst quia . . . ; Mil. 1210, istuc acerbumst quia . . . ; etc., etc. In their origin, quod and quia alike probably represent some accusative construction, quod being the accusative neuter singular of a relative o-stem, and quia the accusative neuter plural of a relative i-stem ; cf. the ablative qui and the dative and ablative quibus from the same stem, by the side of the ablative quo and the dative and ablative quīs from the o-stem. remissus est edendi exercitus : the assembly of the Roman people known as the comitia centuriata, though it early acquired political power, was originally a military organization ; the expression for assembling this organization was exercitum imperare, and that for dismissing it was exercitum remittere. The expression is here transferred to companies of banqueters. So long as Philopolemus was present, there was some one to muster the troops, i.e. some one to give dinner parties ; in his absence, the banqueting army has disbanded.

154. nullum : rarely used as a substantive in good classical prose, except in the genitive and ablative, where it regularly supplants neminis and nemine.

155. dixti : for dixisti ; cf. dixem (dixissem), dixe (dixisse), uixe (uixisse), uixem (uixissem), misti (misisti), scripsi (scripsisti), sumpsi (sumpsisti), duxti (duxisti), duxe (duxisse), traxe (traxisse), etc. Such shorter forms are very common in the early dramatists and are not uncommon in later poets. There is a tendency among recent authorities to regard them as having a different origin from the full forms, but it may be that they are merely the result of syncope (see Lindsay, The Latin Language, p. 464).

156. fugitant : this frequentative form is almost entirely confined to comedy ; it here indicates eagerness and unceremonious haste (hurry away from), and its emphatic position adds to the humor. They all know too well what it meant to give Ergasilus his dinner. prouinciam : office, duty.

157. quod obtigerat, etc. : whatever of it (i.e. of the prouincia) had fallen to their lot after the capture of your Philopolemus. With this use of quod, cf. such passages as Liv. 31. 4. 2, agro Samniti

Apuloque, quod eius publicum populi Romani esset; 38. 23. 10; 38. 54. 3, and often; cf. also quantum in Phorm. 854, O omnium, quantumst qui uiuont, homo hominum ornatissime. See App. Notice the proceleusmatic in this verse.

160. Ergasilus, still keeping up the figure of soldiers preparing for battle, proceeds to enumerate the different classes of troops. Pistorensibus: the Mill-villers, playing upon the words pistor (miller, in the time of Plautus) and Pistoriensis (an inhabitant of Pistorium, a town in Etruria).

162. Paniceis: the Bread-villers, playing upon panis (bread) and perhaps Panna (a town in Samnium, mentioned by Strabo). Placentinis: the Cake-villers, playing upon placenta (cake) and Placentia (a town in Gallia Cispadana).

163. Turdetanis: the Thrush-villers, playing upon turdus (thrush) and Turdetani (a people of Spain). For allusions to the thrush as a great delicacy, see Mart. XIII. 5; Hor. Ep. I. 15. 40. Ficedulensibus: the Little Fig-eat-onians, playing upon ficedula (literally, the little fig-eater [from ficus, fig, edo, to eat, and the diminutive suffix -ula], the name of another bird that was considered a great delicacy for the table; cf. Juv. XIV. 9; Mart. XIII. 5; Gell. XV. 8) and probably some town of which the identity is uncertain.

164. iam: originally used, in the sense of already, to contrast a time, whether past, present, or future, with a preceding time; from indicating transition in point of time, it came to be used, as here, in making a transition from one subject to another: then again. maritumi omnes milites: all the marines, i.e. the fishmongers. For maritumi instead of maritimi, see note on optumi in 68. opus sunt: notice the change in construction, opus here being a predicate nominative: they are a necessity.

165. ut saepe . . . latent: not how often they lie hidden! which would be quam saepe, etc., but how they often lie hidden, ut being an abverb of manner rather than degree. saepe: note the emphatic position.

166. hic . . . priuatus: notice the force of position: this man here (for instance) — what a general he is, though in citizen's dress.

167. modo, only, colloquially used to strengthen imperatives. illum: emphatic position, as regards that boy of mine, I'm sure I, etc.

168. in his diebus: within the next few days; hic is used of what is near the speaker in thought, locality, etc.; in such an expression as this, therefore, it may refer either to the immediate past (e.g.

nocte hac in 127), or, as here, to the immediate future. reconciliassere: a form of the future infinitive found in a few verbs of the first conjugation (cf. aueruncassere, impetrassere, oppugnassere). The origin of this form is problematical. See note on 33.

169. eccum: i.e. ecce eum; eam, eos, eas, ea, illum, etc., are similarly combined into eccam, eccos, etc. The accusative seems to be due to the general objective feeling involved in ecce, which, with its accusative, is often used without reference to the construction of the rest of the sentence, e.g. Ter. Phorm. 484, eccum ab sua palaestra exit foras; Plaut. Mil. 1281, nescio quis eccum incedit. Eccum is commonly used of a person already in sight, but see, in addition to the present passage, 1015; Am. 120; Aul. 781; Bacch. 568. eccum hic: the initial h, as frequently in Plautus, prevents elision, and makes the preceding syllable long. See Introd. § 74, and App.

171. hoc: ablative; see note on qui in 28. pote: (sc. esse) used here for posse. Either potis or pote may be used in early Latin as nominative or accusative, and as singular or plural.

172. faxint: i.e. fecerint; such archaic forms long continued to be used as favorite forms in prayers, just as early forms of expression have preserved themselves in English; e.g. "Thy kingdom come," "Thy will be done," etc. The perfect tense in its future uses disregards the progress of the act, and conceives of it as one that is to be promptly and energetically performed and finished (cf. the English "be gone!" instead of "go!"). This tense is accordingly used in prayers only where the speaker is, or pretends to be, stirred with such emotion at the thought of the possible occurrence of the act that he cannot think of the progress of it, but only the prompt accomplishment of it. Formal or indifferent prayers take the present tense. See App. quo: anywhither, though the English now uses anywhere in this sense. foras: see note on 114.

173. nusquam: sometimes, as here, used in early Latin in the sense of no whither, where we should expect non quoquam; it is commonly used of rest in, instead of motion toward, a place. Such confusion of meanings is common enough in colloquial language, cf. intus usually within, but used also in the sense of from within (e.g. Most. 675); peregre may indicate, in Plautus, rest in, motion to, or motion from. quod sciam: that I know of (so far as I know); sciam is the subjunctive used in a restrictive clause which itself represents a development from a clause of characteristic.

174. tu: used for emphasis, and to contrast with id: why do you ask that? mist: i.e. mi est (mi for mihi).

175. te uocari—ad te: the wit of Ergasilus's words (cf. facete dictum in 176) is commonly removed by emendations; see App.

176. sed si . . . potes contentus esse: Hegio is at this point interrupted by Ergasilus, who takes it for granted that the former was about to finish the sentence by inviting him to dinner. Such an invitation is, of course, what Ergasilus has been hinting at.

177. ne . . . modo: only let it not be.

178. adsiduo: probably an adverb. delecto: regale, humorous, in connection with the perpauillo.

179-181. See App.

179. age sis: come now, if you please; see note on sis in 110. roga emptum: propose the terms of the bargain; literally, ask (me) about the bargain; with this use of rogare, cf. the expression legem rogare, to ask (the people) about a law, i.e. to propose a law for them to vote on. Ergasilus feels that he is taking an important step—his dinner is at stake; and he wants the contract made with due formality. He is about to give Hegio his company (jests and all), but he proposes to have it understood what he is to get in return. nisi qui, etc.: unless any one shall, etc. This use of qui as an indefinite pronoun occurs only after si, sin, nisi, siue, ne, and num. meliores: modifying condicionem (terms), which is here drawn into the quae-clause.

180. quae . . . placeat: a predicating, characterizing clause referring to the future; see note on 12. mi atque amicis: it is not a mark of rudeness or impropriety in a Roman to refer to himself first. Persons are regularly mentioned in Latin in their grammatical order, viz. first, second, third, ego, tu, is (ille).

181. quasi . . . uendam: as if I were selling; the "as if" conjunctions in Latin commonly take the construction of contingent-future ("less vivid future," "ideal") protases. fundum: an acre of ground (literally, a farm), a translation which makes it possible to preserve the pun in the following verse, profundum, an acher for grub. meis: meis. meis . . . legibus: emphasized by position and separation (see Introd. § 99), on conditions to be dictated by myself. me addicere: addicere is an auctioneer's term for "knocking down" to the highest bidder.

182. profundum: literally, an abyss; but see note on 181.

183. si uenturu's: if you are bound to come, differing from uenies (the future act) in calling attention rather to the present state of mind or the present purpose. temperi: the locative case of tempus; cf. our "in time." em: look! see here! etc., while hem is an expression of surprise, joy, grief, etc., well! what! See note on 373. iam: right away.

184. uenare leporem: Hegio pretends not to understand the bearing of Ergasilus's words; if the latter has plenty of leisure, he had better continue his hunt till he finds a dinner worth having. irim: a word of uncertain meaning; perhaps it is equivalent to erem (from er), a hedgehog: at present (in me) you've got hold of a hedgehog.

185. mēus . . . uiam: my living travels a rough road. Ergasilus replies that he will come calceatis dentibus, i.e. with teeth well-shod for the journey (187).

186. ne postules: the distinction that has been commonly made between the perfect and the present tenses in prohibitions — viz. that the perfect is used when the prohibition is addressed to a definite person, the present when it is addressed to an indefinite person — will not hold for any period of the language. The only distinction to be made is that the perfect is emotional and unceremonious, and indicates that the speaker is (or pretends to be) aroused at thought of the possible occurrence of the prohibited act; the present is almost exclusively confined to prohibitions of commonplace and unimportant acts. But in dignified styles, noli with the infinitive almost entirely supplants both forms of expression.

187. tamen: i.e. though the fare is rough, and I must come with well-shod teeth, I'll come in spite of it all; notice the emphatic position of tamen (see Introd. § 99).

188. sane: it is indeed (i.e. you had better change your mind before you go too far). essitas: (frequentative of edo) are you wont to eat.

189. terrestris cenast: my dinner consists of the roots of the earth (i.e. a humble meal of vegetables, etc.), a translation which makes it possible to preserve the pun that follows. sus terrestris bestias: a pig is an animal that "roots in the earth." A pig was considered a great delicacy. Ergasilus says, in effect, "You can't fool me by such talk — you refer now to a pig — I'll be on hand."

190. multis holeribus: (no, no! I mean) of many vegetables; an ablative of quality, to be understood with cena. curato aegrotos: feed sick folks then. All of this has of course been good-natured raillery.

191. numquid uis: a common formula of leave-taking, that's all, is it? literally, do you want anything (else)? Sometimes (e.g. Ter. Phorm. 151) the fuller formula, num quid aliud me uis? is found.

192-193. ratiunculam, quantillum: there is a humorous touch here that has commonly passed unnoticed. Just before meeting Ergasilus, Hegio was on the point of going at once to his brother's. But as soon as he finds that he will have to entertain Ergasilus, he changes his mind and goes to his bank instead. The diminutives show how little the balance seems to him, when he reflects upon the appetite of his coming guest.

193. apud trapessitam: see Introd. § 84. Perhaps, however, the d was silent (see App.). trapessitam: commonly written trapezitam, but it is probable that the character z was not used by Plautus. This character was perhaps occasionally used at a very early period (cf. C. I. L. I. 14, COZANO, where the letter should, according to Lindsay (see App.), have the ordinary z-form; also Velius Longus [7, 51 K]); but ss (medial) and s (initial) were commonly used in its stead. In the time of Cicero, z was revived for the more accurate transliteration of Greek words.

194. ire: where we should expect the future, but a loose use of tenses is common in colloquial Latin; cf. the English "said he was going the next day," instead of "said he would go," etc. dixeram: i.e. had said prior to my meeting with Ergasilus; see Introd. § 95. iuero: I'll be off; the future perfect, instead of the future, emphasizes the promptness with which the act will be completed; see Introd. § 95. This rhetorical use of the tense commonly indicates emotional or energetic utterance. The more energetic form of expression is sometimes chosen, apparently for metrical convenience, in cases where the energetic tone will not be inappropriate. See App.

ACT II. SCENE 1.

195. id: anticipating uos . . . exsequi, which is in apposition with it.

196. id: we should expect eam, but the speaker has in mind the general conception, rather than the particular word aerumnam. animo | aequo: for the hiatus, see Introd. § 85. leui|ōr lābōs |: for the shortening of the final syllable of lābōs, see Introd. § 84.

197. domī: for the shortened -ī, see Introd. § 84. fuistis: synizesis; see Introd. § 78.

198. ei . . . morigerari: to make the best of it; literally, to humor it, to give in to it.

199. This line is commonly considered corrupt (see App.) As it stands, it may mean and by your good behavior to make it easy for your master also to control you (as well as easier and pleasanter for yourselves); literally, and by your dispositions to make it easy for (or in respect to) the master's control also.

201. oculis multa miraclitis: unintelligible; possibly Plautus wrote multam iram editis, you are manifesting plenty of anger by your eyes. See App.

202. si . . . utare, adiuuat: for some reason not yet understood, a condition in which the subject of the verb is an indefinite second person takes the subjunctive, though the apodosis takes the indicative. When the subject is an indefinite third person (e.g. quis), on the other hand, the protasis takes the indicative.

203. This line offers a good illustration of the two common uses of at: (1) to introduce an objection to some one's statement, (2) to introduce the reply to such an objection. nos pudet quia: such passages as idne pudet te quia (Epid. 107) make it probable that the quia-clause is a substantive clause and that quia here means the fact that. See note on 153. cum catenis: where we should say in chains; the Latin expression treats the chains as forming an accompaniment.

204. pigeat . . . nostrum erum: A. & G. 221. b, c; B. 209; G.-L. 377; H. 409, III.; 457.

205. solutos sinat: an expression exactly parallel in form to our "let loose," though esse is probably to be understood with the Latin; it differs from solui sinat in calling attention to the state resulting from the act, rather than to the act itself. emerit: the mood may be due to attraction, or it may be due to the causal-adversative idea involved; the quos . . . emerit gives the reason for saying pigeat (it would be vexatious, etc., since he has paid money for them), but it has at the same time an adversative relation to si solutos sinat (if he should let them loose and incur the risk of losing them, in spite of the fact that they have cost money). Causal and adversative qui-clauses probably originated in the clause of characteristic.

206<sup>a</sup>. ā: see Introd. § 84. scimu(s) nos: as the last foot must be a pure iambus (Introd. § 39), it is clear that the s of scimus was slighted in pronunciation. nos: emphatic we.

206<sup>b</sup>. quod est: what it is; in Cicero we should expect quid sit. The indicative is very frequently found in indirect questions in early Latin. The reason for this may be that they are not as yet far removed from parataxis, — a theory that is supported by the fact that, with comparatively rare exceptions, these indicative indirect questions are such as might actually be interpreted as independent. E.g. Ter. Phorm. 358, uide, auaritia quid facit, which might be punctuated uide! aua-

ritia quid facit! The substantive use of qui for quis is common in early Latin and in poetry (cf. 833). Quod here is probably a similar use of the neuter. si . . . sinat: the apodosis to this protasis might at first thought seem to be quod est, in which case the difference of mood would seem strange. The real apodosis to si . . . sinat is, however, merely implied in quod est (what it is our duty that we should do in case he should, etc.).

207<sup>a</sup>. at: see note on at in 203. fingitis: concoct.

207<sup>b</sup>. quam rem agitis: what you are driving at. For the mood, see note on 206<sup>b</sup>.

208. nos fugiamus: we take to flight? The subjunctive is frequently used, as here, merely to echo, as it were, in interrogative form, a word or a thought that has just been uttered or suggested. Fugiamus is here a sort of indirect quotation of the thought suggested in fugam (207<sup>a</sup>). This use is distinct from that in a deliberative question. quo fugiamus: a rhetorical deliberative question, whither shall we flee? It is here intended to imply there is no place to flee to. The following varieties of questions should be noted:—

Indicative.

(1) Question of fact, asking about what is, was, or will be; e.g. quid fecit? what did he do?

(2) Question of deliberation, asking about what course shall be willed or determined upon; e.g. quid ago? what shall I do? The indicative in such questions is colloquial, like our “what do I do next?” See (5) below.

Subjunctive:

(3) Question of contingent futurity, asking about what would be; e.g. quis dubitet? who would doubt?

(4) Question of obligation or propriety, asking about what ought to be; e.g. cur gaudeam? why should I (ought I to) rejoice?

(5) Question of deliberation, asking about what course shall be willed or determined upon; e.g. quid faciam? quid fiat? what shall I do? what shall be done? One must guard against designating questions of this type as “dubitative” or “indignant” questions, as doubt and indignation are quite as characteristic of the other types above mentioned as they are of this.

Any one of these types may be used as a merely rhetorical question. in patriam: instead of understanding quo fugiamus? in a rhetorical sense, as it was intended, the lorarius treats it as a real deliberative question, and answers it. apage: indicates indignation, impatience, or the like. id: anticipating nos imitari.

209. immo: is always corrective. It sometimes objects to something as altogether wrong, when it may be translated by not at all, on the contrary; sometimes, while admitting that an assertion is true, it objects to it as not being strong enough and adds something to make it more forcible, when it may mean yes, but one would rather say, or the like. This explains the apparently contradictory definitions of dictionaries: no indeed; yes indeed. Both definitions represent the same idea differently applied. erit: notice the long quantity of the ī; see Intro. § 82 (e). dehortor: this word is commonly dissyllabic (dehortor), but it is here trisyllabic, as in Poen. 674 (677).

210. exorare: ex in composition frequently adds the idea of successfully; e.g. orare, to implore, exorare, to implore successfully, to get by imploring; pugnare, to fight, expugnare, to fight successfully, to take by fighting; etc. quidnam: differs from quid, as what in the world? differs from what?

211. arbitris: witnesses; refers apparently to other slaves that had come out with the lorarii from motives of curiosity. Arbiter comes from ad and bito (beto), to go, and originally meant one who goes to a place, i.e. a by-stander, a witness; later it became specialized. But see App.

214. breuem orationem, etc.: with emphasis upon breuem, short be the talk you begin. incipisse: from incipisso, a word used only by Plautus.

215<sup>a</sup>. em: mind you! istuc mihi certum erat: that is just what I intended; literally, that had been decided by me. In this expression, certum is the perfect passive participle of cerno; see note on 492. mihi: the dative here indicates interest, or concern, in the idea certum erat, the implication being that in this particular case the interest was manifested by actually performing the act. See note on 52.

215<sup>b</sup>. istis: those you see. ambo: denotes concerted action or feeling, while uterque brings into prominence the individual.

216. quom: that, introducing a clause in apposition with hanc rem; see note on quom in 151. The expression propter hanc rem quom is then exactly parallel in make-up with the common propterea quod. quae: with eorum understood as its antecedent.

216-217. quae uolumus nos, copia est — ea facitis nos com-potes: whatever we want, plenty of it is on hand—you let us profit by it; literally, you make us partakers of it. The antecedent of quae is eorum understood. Ea is apparently an early instance of the rare use of the ablative with compos; but the line is corrupt. See App.

218. nunciam: probably composed of nunc and iam; it is, however, trisyllabic, the i becoming vocalic as in quoniam, etiam. Another view regards nunciam, etiam, etc., as made up of nunce, **eti* (cf. ἐτι), etc., and an adverbial termination -am. si uidetur: if you please; literally, if it seems (good to you).

219. arbitri, arbitrari: for the original meaning, here preserved, of arbiter, see note on 210; arbitrari originally meant to be an arbiter, i.e. a witness; then as a witness of a thing would have an opinion regarding the thing, it came to mean to judge, to think. The present passage preserves one of the few instances of the original use of this verb.

220. permanet: leak out; literally, trickle through. Notice the emphatic position.

221. astu: ablative of astus. colas: manage.

222. id: referring to the general idea, without reference to the particular word (doli) already used.

225. tamen: i.e. even though the present prospects are good for our successfully carrying out our scheme. uiso opust: there is need of (our looking out, i.e.) foresight; literally, there is need of it having been looked out (by us), where uiso is of course to be understood as impersonal and as used in the sense of prouiso. The neuter of the perfect passive participle is often thus used in the comic poets with opus est and usus est. It may be translated as though it were a gerund, though it differs from the gerund in substantivizing the conception of the verb in a perfected passive form, rather than in a progressing, active form. Cf. the English expression, "There is no need of its being known," where the use of "its" shows that "being known" is practically felt as a substantive, expressing a state resulting from an act of becoming known.

227. haud somniculose: cf. our expression, "wide-awake," used in similar connections.

229. nam: (and you may well hope) for. tu: i.e. I do not need to tell you.

230. offerre . . . uilitati: i.e. am counting my own safety of but little consequence in comparison with yours; literally, am offering my own head to cheapness. meum: mēum.

232. maxima pars . . . homines: a sudden change in the form of the sentence. Such changes are common in daily conversation such as this is supposed to be. If the reading here were homines . . . maxima pars, maxima pars might be explained as in partitive apposition with homines, but with the reverse order this seems impossible.

233. impetrant: attempted action, are trying to obtain.

234. penes sese: in their own hands.

236. ut mihi te uolo esse: how I want you to be to me, just as I promised you (228) how I would be to you. For the mood of uolo, see note on quod est in 206<sup>b</sup>.

237. meo patri: emphatic position, my own father, i.e. so you must not feel offended that I do so to you — my anxiety must be my excuse.

238. ego: on my part. si te audeam (sc. nominare): if I chose (should choose). Audere is connected with audis and originally referred to wishing, desiring, etc. Cf. sodes, i.e. si audes, if you please. The transition from the idea of desiring to that of daring may be easily traced.

239. secundum: after, a preposition derived from sequor. patriem: real father.

240. audio: often thus used to denote impatience, real or pretended, at another's remarks, implying that they are unnecessary. Lindsay translates, I know, I know. propterea: anticipating the ut-clause. te uti: perhaps, however, Plautus wrote ut ted, instead of uti. Ted would then be an accusative formed after the analogy of the ablative, which originally ended in d. This d was dropped at an early date, but perhaps Plautus still retained it in med, ted, sed. memineris: viz. that we have exchanged characters. Memini and odi were originally true perfects, meaning I have kept in mind and I have conceived hatred for, ideas which at an early date came to be felt merely as equivalent to I remember and I hate. Exactly the same thing has happened in the English use of "I have got," which originally meant "I have obtained" ("have got" being felt as the perfect tense of "get"), but which is now frequently used with exactly the same sense as "I have," "I possess," the notion of the perfect tense having entirely disappeared.

241. obsecro te hoc unum: this use of two accusatives with obsecro is rare.

242. animum: will.

243. ut qui . . . uelint: in apposition with animum, that they wish. The qui is merely an intensive particle (originally an ablative or instrumental form), adding here the same force that it adds to at in atqui; cf. Capt. 553, et eum morbum mi esse ut qui me opus sit insputarier; Men. 1092; Am. 705, 776; As. 930; Aul. 348; and often elsewhere. It seems to have meant, originally, anyhow, then, at any rate, at least, surely. See note on 28. fuisse: to be no longer; literally, to have been (as a thing of the past); cf. Verg. Aen. II. 325, fuit Ilium, Ilium is no more; Capt. 516, fuisse mauelim, I should prefer to be dead; etc. ess(e) nunc: the final e of esse was probably silent sometimes, like the final e of nempe, quippe, ille, inde, mitte, etc.; see Introd. § 77, also App.

244. quom . . . imperitabam: an adversative clause, though, etc.; for the mood, see note on quom feras in 146. See App.

245. te erga: erga commonly precedes its case, but exceptions to this rule are found in Plautus and Terence.

246. perque: probably read metrically as monosyllabic perq; see App. quód hóstica: cf. quíd exprobras in Trin. 318. See App.

247. ne . . . secus honore honestes, etc.: i.e. that you continue to feel just as much respect for me as hitherto, though the part you play will compel you to treat me like a slave. quom seruibas mihi: the normal position of words is here inverted merely to give seruibas an emphatic position; the fact that such an inversion in short sentences brings a word (here mihi) to the end of the sentence does not necessarily make it emphatic; see Introd. § 99. Such forms as seruibas (for seruiebas) are common in early Latin; e.g. scibam for sciebam, audibam for audiebam, etc. For the construction, see note on quom in 146.

248. qui fueris: for quis fueris; see note on qui in 206<sup>b</sup>. Notice that in indirect questions which cannot be separated from their context and treated as independent, the subjunctive is the rule in early Latin, as in classical times. ut . . . ut meminervis: the repetition of the ut is for the purpose of getting a new start, as it were, after the intervening clause.

249. istuc: in an emphatic position.

250. inest: in an emphatic position, there is hope, etc., the emphasis upon inest contrasting with previous doubts and uncertainties. in hăc: see Introd. § 84; also App.

ACT II. SCENE 2.

251. iam: directly, the idea of already applied to the future. his: i.e. Philocrates and Tyndarus.

252. ubi sunt: the captives had stepped to one side (cf. 218') and were not seen at once.

253. Philocrates now adopts the saucy, happy-go-lucky tone characteristic of slaves. edepol tibi ne, etc.: the position itself of tibi gives a tone of pertness: you've taken mighty good care that we shouldn't turn up missing — I see that; this emphasis upon "that" reproduces the emphasis brought out by the position of the clause ne . . . essemus, which would normally follow the word upon which it depends (cf. 255, cauet ne, etc.). in quaestione: in quaestione esse is used in the sense of to be missing; literally, to be (the one sought) in a search. Similar expressions are common in Plautus; e.g. Pers. 52; Pseud. 663; Mil. 1279; Trin. 278<sup>a</sup>; Cist. 593; Cas. 530.

254. uinclis: such forms, uinclum, saeclum, periclum, etc., are the earliest forms and are more common in Plautus than uinculum, saeclum, periculum. The parasitic u between the c and l arose from an (unconscious) effort to facilitate the pronunciation. circum-moeniti: with moenire for the later munire, cf. coerauit for curauit (C. I. L. I. 600), loedos for ludos (C. I. L. I. 567), etc. Instead of oe in such words, oi is frequently found, and both oi and oe continued to be used in inscriptions even in classical times.

255. The humor from this point on throughout the scene cannot fail to be appreciated by any one who keeps in mind the general situation.

256. cautor captus est: the catcher (literally, the wary one) finds himself caught. One must not mistake captus est for a gnomic perfect (aorist), a use of the perfect tense that is first found in the poets of the classical period, who borrowed it from the Greeks. Here est alone is the verb, the captus being used in the predicate to express the state.

257. an: an commonly introduces the second part of a disjunctive question, but in early Latin and even in the poets of the classical period it is frequently used as a simple interrogative. The same use is occasionally found in Livy and later prose. ut: cur would be more common after causa.

258. sim mercatus: the subjunctive may be due to any one of these causes (or to all combined), viz.: (1) to a desire to represent the quos-clause as the indirectly reported thought suggested (by the question) to the minds of the persons addressed; (2) to a desire to emphasize the causal relation of the quos-clause to the clause upon which it depends (see App.); (3) to the fact that it depends upon another subjunctive.

259. tibi . . . uitio uortere: to lay it up against you; literally, to turn it unto you for a fault. quia: (the fact) that; see note on 153.

260. sī ābēamus : for the hiatus, see Introd. § 85. fuat : an old form of the present subjunctive used in the sense of sit; see Introd. § 88 (a).

261. apud uos : i.e. in your country. See note on 193. meus : mēus.

262. ignauī : refers to their having allowed themselves to be taken alive. fūimus : the original length of the u is here retained.

263. ex te solo : i.e. without being overheard.

264. quarum rerum : objective genitive, depending upon falsiloquom.

265. quod sciam : see note on 173. nescibo : an old form for nesciam; cf. note on seruibas in 247, and the forms ibo, quibo, and nequibo, found even in classical times. See App. siquid nescibo, id nescium tradam : Philocrates is indulging in a sly trick of words. Hegio will understand him to mean, If there is anything I am ignorant about I'll frankly tell you so; but there lies in the words also the meaning, If there is anything I don't know, I'll tell you all about it just the same (literally, I'll give it to you, unknown though it be). Tyndarus enjoys this bit of fun, as the next words show.

266. est in tostrina : i.e. the fleecing has begun. The form tostrina is for the later tonstrina; cf. cesor (for censor), Pisaureses (for Pisaurenses), etc., in early inscriptions. cultros addinet : is putting the clippers on him; the change of subject seems strange, but the subject of this verb is easily supplied.

267. inuolucrum inicere : to put the napkin on him. He will handle him "without gloves" and regardless of consequences.

268. utrum strictimne . . . dicam . . . an per pectinem : Such uses of -ne after utrum form reminiscences of the original meaning of the interrogative particle utrum, viz.: which of the two? The questions introduced by -ne were in apposition with it: which of the two (shall I do), say this or that? Vtrum, however, came at an early period to be felt as merely an interrogative particle, whereupon the -ne was of course no longer regarded as necessary. This use is distinct from that represented by utrumne, where the ne seems to be appended only because utrum has also an indefinite use (= either one or the other of two); the -ne makes it clear at once that the interrogative use is intended; see App. strictimne . . . an per pectinem : give him a close shave, or merely trim him up a little.

269. uerum : but. It is possible that such a use of uerum originated in some accusative construction with the meaning as to the truth

(cf. "as a matter of fact"). Such an expression following a statement implies that what has been already alleged is not true, but that what follows is. This relation between what follows and what has preceded is thus one of opposition, and uerum at length came to be felt merely as an adverb equivalent to but. frugist (i.e. frugi est): is good for anything; frugi was originally felt merely as a dative of service from frux (cf. Pseud. 408. tamen ero frugi bonae), for use; but as for use practically meant useful, this dative came to be regarded, and used, as an indeclinable adjective, meaning proper, honest, discreet, etc. Cic. Verr. II. 3. 27. 67, homines frugi ac sobrii; Cluent. 16. 47, seruos frugi atque integer; Ter. Heaut. 580, hominis frugi et temperantis; Hor. Sat. II. 5. 77, (Penelope) tam frugi tamque pudica; Plin. Ep. II. 17. 4, atrium frugi nec tamen sordidum. See note on 956. usque admutilabit probe: will get right down to the skin in fine style; with this use of probe, cf. the English expression "a good thrashing."

270. quid tu: quid and quid tu are frequently used merely to secure the close attention of the person addressed to a question about to be asked, performing the same function as the English "how is it?" "say!" "by the way!" or the like. With tu, probably no particular verb was felt to be omitted; it merely stands in a general way as the subject of action. mauelis: represents exactly the same use of the subjunctive as in uelim (I should like).

271. quod sit: which would be. If the quod-clause were used in the sense of which is, the indicative would here be used, as it would then be either a determinative clause (the particular one of these alternatives which, etc.), or one equivalent to si with the indicative (whatever is, i.e. if anything is, etc., that is what I want). In the latter case the characterizing idea, no matter how prominent, would not give rise to the subjunctive. See Appendix to Bennett's Latin Grammar, § 402, with the references there given. longissime: one would expect longissimum; the adverb gives the degree to which the idea of sit a malo is true, the adjective would ascribe to the antecedent of quod a characteristic (a malo longissimum).

273. erat: Philocrates used the perfect fuit in the preceding verse; the imperfect here shows that his mind is wandering back and dwelling, as it were, amid the former scenes. quam si essem: one might expect fuissem, but quam si here follows the same construction as when it means as if (cf. note on quasi in 181), the imperfect here representing the present tense thrown back into the past. In early Latin, however, the present subjunctive is apparently frequently used in unreal present conditions and the imperfect in unreal past conditions. familiaris: of the family. As Philocrates actually was a "son of the family" in Elis, the nec secus erat, etc., was literally true and the condition si essem . . . filius was not contrary to fact at all. The spectators of course are thoroughly enjoying this hoodwinking of Hegio.

274. eugepae (εὖ γε, παῖ): capital! Good, by Jingo! Thalem talento: this pun is interesting as an item of proof that the Θ of Θαλῆς was pronounced much like t; the only difference was that between th in rat-hole and t in top. As the Latin originally had no aspirates of its own, Θαλῆς was, if we may judge from similar words in inscriptions, transliterated Tales. See note on colaphos in 88. Thales was the earliest of the Greek philosophers, and one of the seven wise men. talento non emam: I would not take (literally, buy) at a talent, i.e. if I could get him for a talent (I have a far better wise man in Philocrates). Notice that the present subjunctive here, by implication, as a result of an omitted protasis, seems to mean I would buy (involving the will). Strictly speaking, the idea is I should buy (merely a conclusion to an "ideal" "less vivid future" condition, i.e. should do so, if any one were to make me the offer). The Attic silver talent was worth about $1100. A small amount, instead of this large one, would seem more natural in such a connection, but "big talk" was frequently indulged in by slaves, just as ragamuffins nowadays are always ready, on the slightest provocation, to "bet a hundred dollars." Furthermore, in using talento, Tyndarus is probably thinking of the pun more than of anything else. But see App.

275. ad: in comparison with, a meaning developed from the use of ad to denote direction toward; ad sapientiam huius would strictly mean directing our attention toward (i.e. if we speak with regard to this man's wisdom). nimius nugator: egregious simpleton. A word has apparently dropped out of this line.

276. ut facete . . . contulit: not how cleverly he has adapted (which would be quam facete), but how he has cleverly adapted!

277. The richer the captive and the higher his birth, the brighter would be Hegio's prospects of exchanging him for his son. Philocrates, in the character of Tyndarus, is willing to give him every encouragement, and proceeds to paint himself in very satisfactory colors. genere: family. Polyplusio (πολύ, πλούσιος): the Money-bags family; Polyplusio is an adjective, modifying genere understood, the preceding de still governing the case. Plautus himself probably wrote Poluplusio; y does not seem to have been introduced till the time of Cicero.

278. unum : i.e. the one above all others.

279. ipse : common in early Latin for ipse. hic : like tu in 270, is felt as subject in the most general indefinite sense, no particular verb being present to the mind. An accusative is often used to denote the object of action in a similarly indefinite sense ; e.g. Ter. Phorm. 755, Quid illam alteram ? ab summis uiris : to be taken with the passive verb (is held in honor) suggested by quo honore est.

280. tum igitur : in that case then. quom . . . gratias : for the mood, see note on 146. The metrical structure of this line is doubtful. It seems barely possible that we should read Alēis. See App.

281. quid diuitiae : on the case of diuitiae, see note on hic in 279. unde excoquat sebum senex : this is a play upon opimae, which originally meant fat. The entire line might be rendered : How about his purse ? Is it a fat one ? Fat enough to keep him in grease as long as he lives. senex : in apposition with the subject, till old age ; literally, as an old man.

282. pater : for the construction, see note on hic in 279.

283. id Orcum : notice the force of the position of id, that's a matter which, etc.

284. philosophatur : I have followed the custom of editors in writing ph instead of p, though it is probable that ph was not used in the time of Plautus. See notes on 88 and 274.

285. quid . . . nomen : what was his name ? literally, what was unto him as name. "What name?" would commonly be quod nomen ? Thensaurocrysonicocrysidēs : a name manufactured from θησαυρός, treasury ; χρυσός, gold ; νίκη, victory ; χρυσός, gold ; and the patronymic termination -ides : Goldy Goldman, Jr.

286. uidelicet : clearly enough, from uidere licet, literally, it is permitted to see (cf. scilicet and ilicet, from scire licet and ire licet). inditum id nomen quasist : that has been applied to him as his name, so to speak (as a sort of name) ? Hegio naturally enough infers that such a compound could not be his real name, but must have been used as a substitute for it, in allusion to the riches he had acquired. Quasi is often thus used to apologize for an expression that might seem out of place (nomen in this instance) ; cf. philosophia artium omnium quasi parens (Cic. de orat. I. 3. 9). See App.

287. immo edepol : see note on immo in 209. ipsius : ipse regularly implies contrast ; here the avarice that characterized the father himself, implying a desire not to make such a charge against the son. audaciam : greed (for money). The word is connected with avidus, aveo. Cf. Festus, p. 20, Audacia ab auide, id est cupide, agendo dicta est.

288. germano : real.

289. quid tu ais : the pronouns tu and ego are commonly emphatic, and indicate contrast with some one else, but occasionally, like tu here, they seem to be used without special emphasis. eius : eiūs. immo : see note on 209.

290. ut . . . noscas : this clause depends upon some words to be supplied : "I will mention the following fact," or the like. genio suo : the effect is heightened by the prominent position of these words. By genius is meant a sort of guardian spirit that was supposed to be one's constant companion from the cradle to the grave, representing in fact one's very existence, and watching over one's welfare. The allusion here is to some ceremony in honor of this spirit. quando : this indefinite use of quando is extremely rare in Plautus. It is not recognized at all by some scholars. See App. sacrificat : ante-classical for sacrificat.

291. quibus est opus Samiis uasis utitur : the vessels he needs are Samian ware, literally, the vessels of which there is need he uses of Samian ware. Samiis : a cheap kind of earthenware came from Samos; cf. Bacch. 202; Men. 178; Cic. Mur. 36.

292. ne : (for fear) lest. ut : how. uide : judge, conclude.

293. hac : sc. uia; cf. 953. eādem : ablative agreeing with opera understood, at the same time; literally, by the same effort. Opera is expressed in Bacch. 60; Capt. 450; Most. 1039. ego : see note on tu in 289. exquaesiuro : I'll get out of this man (in a twinkling); the future perfect emphasizes the promptness with which the act will be accomplished. It betrays the self-confidence of Hegio, who "means business" with these captives, and has no time to dilly-dally. See the note on iuro in 194, App. on that passage, and Introd. § 95. Exquiesiuro would be the more regular form, but -quaero for -quiro is occasionally found in composition; see B. App. § 87. 1.

294. frugi : modifying hominem; see note on 269.

295. ego : another instance of an unemphatic ego; see note on tu in 289.

296. tua ex re : to your own advantage. feceris : a true future perfect (will have acted), not one used like iuro in 194 and exquaesiuro in 293, to indicate promptness of accomplishment.

297. What Tyndarus has hitherto said in this scene has been "aside." He now cleverly changes his tone and bearing to suit the rôle of master. that he here begins to play. tamen : i.e. even if you are not willing to confess. scio: if this is the correct reading, this must be pronounced scīo. Perhaps Plautus wrote aio.

298. uolui: did want; see Introd. § 99.

299. meam: mēam.

300. perdidī: differs from amisi in that it commonly implies culpability.

301. istunc me potius quam te metuere, etc.: the intentional ambiguity of these words would be thoroughly enjoyed by the audience. They may mean: (1) I see no reason now why I should fear him rather than you; (2) I see no reason why he should fear me rather than you, i.e. that I would be untrue to him; (3) I see no reason why I should fear him more than you should; or (4) I see no reason why he should fear me more than you should.

302. cum istoc: strict logic would require cum istius opibus.

303. meminī: see note on memineris in 240. audebat: sc. laedere from the following laedat. laedat licet: the two verbs in such cases were originally felt as syntactically independent, laedat being a subjunctive of permission: he may offend. It is permitted. In the course of time the verb in the subjunctive came to be felt as dependent upon the licet. Thereupon, to make this dependence clear, ut was occasionally used before the subjunctive.

304. uiden: i.e. uidesne. With the loss of final e, compare quin? for qui nē? (why not? nē being used in the sense of non); sin for si nē; duc and fac for the earlier forms duce and face; etc., etc. An intermediate step is seen in nempe and quippe, which were probably sometimes pronounced nemp and quip (see App.), though the e continued to be written. humana: accusative plural.

305. fueram: i.e. had been prior to the time of my capture. See App. As Tyndarus is the son of Hegio, he is in reality telling the truth, though he thinks he is uttering falsehoods.

306. alterius: to be read altrius; cf. note on 8.

307. proinde ut: where we should expect talem qualis, or the like; proinde ac is unknown to Plautus. familiae: with especial reference to the slaves of a household.

309. hoc . . . uolueram: this (i.e. what I am about to say) is a matter about which I had (i.e. before the present opportunity presented itself) been wanting you informed (and I will now proceed to improve the opportunity), unless perchance you yourself wish me not to. See App. on this passage and also on 305. hoc te monitum: for monere with two accusatives, see B. 178. l. d; A. & G. 238. b; G. 376. Rem. 1; H. 412. The accusative hoc is one retained from the active construction.

312. apud nos, apud te : see note on 193 and App. thereon.

313. est : the emphatic position of this word is due to the fact that the truth here asserted is sometimes disputed or doubted. -que et (instead of the et . . . et, or the cum . . . tum of classical prose): a combination chiefly confined to poetry and Silver Latin prose.

314. habueris : habeo, have, keep, easily comes to be used, as here, in the sense of treat.

315. bene merenti bene profuerit : the man who does his duty will find himself well rewarded ; literally, to the well deserving it will have profited well. The future perfect profuerit regards the result as one to be looked back upon from a future point of view ; the following erit regards a future result from the present point of view. par : a corresponding return.

316. The effect is heightened by the fact that, although Tyndarus intends to deceive and believes his words to be false, the audience knows that he is unconsciously telling the truth.

317. faterin : i.e. faterisne.

320. ne . . . faxint : a more energetic and emotional form of expression than ne faciant. See note on 172. tuom animum . . . diuitiae meae : notice the chiasmus and the strongly contrasted positions of these phrases, your mind, my riches. auariorem : with reference to the ransom that he expected Hegio would exact.

321. patrī : for the shortening, see Introd. § 84. magis : with decere.

322. saturum : well supplied.

323. potius : repeating the idea of magis (321), but adding to it the further idea of personal preference. illi : adverb = illic. mendicantem : alluding to the results of paying an excessive ransom.

324. Notice the repetition of the emphatic ego in this and the following lines. It seems to indicate conscious superiority over the vulgar crowd with their false ideals. uirtute : kindness. The term uirtus covers all the qualities of an ideally perfect uir (from which word it is derived), i.e. manliness, virtue, strength, bravery, worth, goodness, etc. It should be translated in each case according to the particular quality uppermost in the thoughts of the speaker. nostrum : including other members of his family. One might, however, have expected meorum.

325. non ego : I'm not the man to.

326. scio ego, etc. : the tone conveyed by the position of words should not be lost : full well do I know, many are the men whom, before now, etc.

327. est: emphatic by position, there are occasions when, etc. ubi . . . praestet: expressions of this type commonly have the indicative in Plautus (cf. 263, sunt quae uolo), and this construction is found also in later poets. The subjunctive of characteristic, however, is the regular usage of classical prose.

328. odi ego aurum: as for gold, I despise it (see Introd. § 99).

329. hoc: probably an adverb = huc; cf. Pers. 605, iube hoc accedat; Truc. 531, adduce hoc istas.

330. Alide: see Introd. § 93 (d).

331. eum si reddis mihi: if you restore him to me. For this loose use of the present tense (reddis where strict accuracy would require reddideris), see Introd. § 95 (a. 1). Eum should be read eūm. mīhī prāē tērēā | ūnum: for the hiatus in the diaeresis, see Introd. § 85 (a). ne dūis: ne with the present subjunctive in prohibition is used only in prohibitions of a mild type (as compared with ne and the perfect); see note on 186. Here it is hardly stronger than you need not give. For the form dūis, see Introd. § 88 (a).

332. amittam: see note on 36.

333. oras: here, as often, with its original meaning, say. Similarly orator originally meant spokesman; ambassador, orator, pleader represent specialized applications of the original meaning.

335. cliens: allusions to Roman customs and institutions are very common in Plautus, though very rare in Terence. In Greece the social position of a physician would not have been likely to be such as is here indicated. Plautus has in mind the condition of things at Rome, where in his time physicians were commonly freedmen or slaves. Upon being manumitted, a slave became the cliens of his former master.

336. hoc: i.e. the restoration of the lost son. in procliui: easy; literally, on the incline; cf. our expression, "uphill work." One is reminded of the saying, "as easily as falling off a log." Tyndarus apparently forgets, for the moment, to preserve the tone of the aristocratic gentleman he is supposed to be, and falls into the free and easy style of the slave that he really is.

337. fac: see to it. ōrō Hēgio: this is not to be regarded as an instance of hiatus; see Introd. § 74, and notes on 152, 169.

338. ab re: against my interests; cf. Trin. 238; As. 224. The contrary idea, "in one's interests," is sometimes expressed by ex re, or in rem; cf. 296, 386, etc.

339. ego me: as far as I'm concerned, contrasted with the hunc in the next line. donicum: a common form of donec in early Latin. ille: with a gesture toward Philocrates.

340. aestumatum: with a price set upon him; literally, appraised; the amount thus fixed was to be forfeited to Hegio in case the supposed slave failed to return. See App. des: the rule commonly given, that the present subjunctive in commands is used chiefly of an indefinite person, is not true for any period of Latin. In Plautus and Terence there are only twelve instances of this use addressed to an indefinite person, while there are 128 instances addressed to a definite person. In Cicero there are only four instances (not counting those used as protases, e.g. roges, respondeam) addressed to an indefinite person, while there are twenty-two (all in the Epistulae) addressed to a definite person. See App.

341. illi: adverb. immo: see note on 209. misero: on this rhetorical, energetic use of the future perfect at the end of a line, see note on iuero in 194, with the App. on that passage.

342. tuom: this word and tua in the next line are emphasized by their positions; cf. also the emphatic tu that follows. This emphasis is apparently explained by the fact that Hegio is contrasting his son, Philopolemus, and his (i.e. Philopolemus') father with Philocrates and his (Philocrates') father. By the proposed plan, communication would be established in both directions.

343. uelis: the subjunctive is due to its dependence upon another subjunctive.

344. nil est: it's no use, i.e. it is labor lost. luseris: will have frittered away, a true future perfect, referring to what will have resulted when the opera is finished; it is thus a different use of the tense from that found in 194, 293, 341, etc.

345. omne: the whole thing. See App. transactum reddet: differs from transiget in calling attention to the state resulting from the act; transiget would refer merely to the act itself. Cf. the English phrase, "get a thing finished," instead of "finish a thing."

346. quoi plus credat: in whom he has more confidence, a predicating characterizing clause of the developed type ("clause of characteristic"); see note on 12. Plus is the accusative of "the inner object," or of "the result produced." A. & G. 238. b; B. 176; G.-L. 332, 333; H. 409.

347. magis . . . ex sententia: more to his mind.

348. neque adeo: nor yet, and furthermore not. Adeo (ad + eo) follows rather closely the meaning of its constituent parts:—

(1) to that (such a) point (of space, time, or degree); to a high degree, very (see note on mirum adeo in 824);

(2) just, precisely, a meaning developed from a restrictive application of the one just indicated (to that point, and no further, which would easily come to suggest the general idea of precision);

(3) to that (end), with a view to that;

(4) in addition to that, i.e. furthermore, moreover, besides. In this last sense, the thing added is sometimes (especially in the phrase atque adeo) opposed to the preceding context, when it may be translated still.

quoi concredat: a predicating characterizing clause of the original type; see note on 12. hodie: this particle seems to be often used in early Latin as a mere formality, without temporal force. Perhaps the nearest English parallel is the colloquial use of "now" in such expressions as "he did not say so at all, now," "you'll never get off like that, now." Sometimes this colorless hodie seems untranslatable; in this passage it is commonly translated ever, though it probably has no temporal force. audacius: with greater confidence.

349. ne uereare: see note on 331. periculo: risk.

350. ingenio: disposition. eius: eius. erga: this post-positive use of erga is chiefly ante-classical, and is most common with me, te, se.

351. fide: guarantee.

352. quam citissime potest, tam: for the more common quam potest tam with a positive, or quam citissime alone. cedere ad factum: be carried out, put into execution; literally, come to a deed. See App.

353. causa quin . . . des: reason why you should not give. Quin is composed of qui, how? or why? and the negative particle nē (which in early times was used in the sense of non); it here retains its original meaning. quin . . . des: why you should not give, an indirect question of obligation, or propriety. See note on 208. uiginti minas: about $360. Such estimates, however, in terms of modern money are based merely on equivalence in weight of coin, without any reference to the relative purchasing power of the amount in question.

354. optuma—immo: not at all—the best of reasons rather (why I should), optuma agreeing with causa understood, with which cur dem is easily supplied. This position of immo is very unusual before Livy; in answering a question it commonly stands first.

355. atque: and in fact, introducing a sort of afterthought. He has been so much pleased with his interview with the supposed Philo-crates that he proposes to be indulgent and kind to him, quite unconscious of the fact that he is being sadly duped. The pathos about all this cannot fail to be appreciated.

356. quom honestas: for the indicative in a causal quom-clause in Plautus, see note on 146.

357. haud molestum: litotes. iam: emphatic by position, so soon. He pretends he had not expected such consideration until the return of the supposed Tyndarus. quod: that. collus: ante-classical for collum. caret: is rid of.

358. The alliteration in this line is noteworthy. quod bonis . . . bonis: every kind deed done a good man—a good man will regard such a deed as its own abundant reward; literally, whatever kindness is kindly done to the good, that reward (= reward for that) is full for the good. Notice the strongly contrasted positions of bonis.

359. dic(e): for the classical dic; cf. duce, face, etc., for duc, fac, etc. Dice should probably be read here with silent e, which afterward came to be omitted also in writing. For other instances of silent e at the end of a word, see Intro. § 77. See App.

360. ad patrem: with reference merely to the act of carrying to the father, as limit of motion; patri would express interest on the part of the father, including the for-idea as well as the to-idea. uin: uisne. uocem: such a subjunctive depending upon uin is common in Plautus, but only in the first person. Such uses are reminiscences of parataxis (uisne? uocem? do you wish it? shall I call him?), but the subjunctive came at an early date to be felt as dependent. See note on 121.

ACT II. SCENE 3.

The manuscripts indicate here the beginning of a new scene. There is no change in the characters upon the stage, but Philocrates has, during most of the preceding interview, been standing apart. Hegio now crosses over to talk with him, and this makes the forming of a new scene not unnatural.

361. quae res bene uortat: a regular formula for invoking a blessing upon a proposed undertaking; the quae res refers to the plan that was now to be put into execution; cf. Pers. 329; Aul. 218, 787; Curc. 729; also Hor. Ep. I. 7. 94, quod te obsecro et obtestor, uitae me redde priori, where quod refers to uitae me redde priori.

362. uolt: the emphatic position of this word seems to imply some doubt on the part of Hegio.

362-363. erūs has more particular reference to a man's relation toward his slaves; dominus to his relation toward the family as a whole, with all its belongings. Hegio seems to use them here, however, without any particular distinction in mind. operam dare . . . fideliter: to obey faithfully.

363. quod: in what; quod strictly has its antecedent in the ellipsis of some such idea as in that matter, or in those matters. uelit: uolt in the preceding line has suggested an indirect reporting of the speaker's own ideas; hence the subjunctive.

364. aestumatum huīc: h here "makes position"; see note on 169.

365. uelle: i.e. se uelle. ad patrem: notice the double meaning: (1) your father, (2) his father; cf. 375, 379, etc.

366. meum: my own; note the position.

367. filiis: probably dative.

368. In what follows one should notice how cleverly, in word and thought, Philocrates acts the part of a slave. utroque uorsum: in both directions, an adverbial expression sometimes written utroque-uorsum. rectum: a participle, directed.

371. Hegio's change of tone should be noted, as he begins to address the supposed slave; the emphatic tute tibi and tuopte, for instance, are not deferential. tute: you're the one that. tuopte: this emphasizing -pte is appended in Plautus to me, mea, meo, tuo, sua, suom, suo.

372. Notice the hiatus. In early poetry, however, final m is frequently not elided; see Introd. § 85.

373. em tibi hominem: here's your man! literally, behold the man for you. hominem: accusative after the verbal idea implied in em. Em (en) must be distinguished from hem; the former means lo! behold! look you! the latter, well, I declare! ahem! or the like. See note on 183. gratiām hābeo: here again the h makes the preceding syllable long; see notes on 169, 364. Gratiam habere means to feel grateful; literally, to have gratitude (in one's heart); gratias agere, to express gratitude.

374. quom: probably an instance of the explicative quom, in that, or the fact that; see note on 151. facis: afford.

376. qui me quid . . . agitem . . . perferat: me is grammatically construed as the object of perferat, with quid agitem as a sort of secondary object; literally, who will report me what I am doing; logically we should expect quid . . . agitem alone. Such a use is common in Plautus and Terence; e.g. Heaut. 84, fac me ut sciam, for fac ut ego sciam.

377. omnem rem: the whole story, loosely added as an appositive to the quid-clauses.

379. patrem: the reference of this word in this and the following lines is intentionally left ambiguous.

380. rebitas: from re and bītēre (to go); adbitere, perbitere, interbitere, and other compounds also occur in Plautus. See note on arbiter in 211. si non rebitas: the protasis of dem. Notice the loose use of the present tense. ut . . . dem: with the understanding that. Bennett calls such clauses “stipulative.”

382. The hidden meaning should not be missed.

383. animum aduortas uolo: such uses originally consisted of two independent sentences, animum aduortas! uolo, pay attention! I wish it. See note on 360.

385. adhuc locorum: hitherto; literally, up to this point of time, locorum being a partitive genitive, and here referring to time, rather than place; cf. postea loci, afterward (Sall. Jug. 102); interea loci, meanwhile (Ter. Eun. 126); ad id locorum, hitherto (Sall. Jug. 63. 6); post id locorum, afterward (Plaut. Cas. 120); inde loci, since then (Lucr. 5. 437).

386 f. ut . . . petam: explanatory of the faciam; for faciam ut petam one might expect merely petam. in rem tuam: see note on 338.

387. This line is corrupt. Perhaps Plautus wrote idque persequar instead of id persequarque.

389. salutem dicito: remember me to.

392. me honore honestiorem . . . fecit: has shown me unusual consideration; literally, has made me more honored than honor. Again the double meaning should be noted. Hegio would understand the words to mean more honored than honor itself, but Tyndarus chooses words that may also mean more honored than my real station as a slave calls for. See App.

393. ne praecipias: for this mild form of prohibition, see note on 331. tamen: i.e. even without instructions from you.

394. nam quidem: the only instance in Plautus of nam quidem instead of nam equidem; see App. nisi quod: aside from the fact that. Nisi in such expressions was originally felt as introducing a conditional idea, and the explicative quod-clause was the subject of the verb to be supplied with nisi. The expression originally meant if it were (was, is) not a fact that, or something similar, but it drifted away from this original meaning.

395. quo pacto . . . conuenerit: of the agreement that has been made ; literally, in what way it has been agreed. mīhī cūm hōc : see notes on 169, 364, 373.

396. mora : waste of time.

397. ut . . . redimat : that he is to redeem. nostrum . . . amborum uicem : in exchange for both of us, nostrum being a partitive genitive. Tyndarus is slyly pleading for himself, without arousing the suspicion of Hegio. Compare such expressions as meam uicem, in my stead, on my account (Plaut. Most. 355), tuam uicem (Cic. Fam. XII. 23. 3). Bennett (Lat. Gram., Appendix, 310. 3) thinks that uicem was originally an accusative of apposition (= as an exchange), and cites the present passage and Most. 355 as supporting this view.

398. The metrical structure of this line is uncertain. in rem : see note on 338.

400. suos quoique carus : every man loves his own son ; literally, his own son is dear to each. numquid aliud uis, etc. : a common formula for closing an interview ; see note on 191.

401. me hic ualere : Tyndarus wants to put in an effective plea for himself, but has some hesitation as to how he can proceed without arousing the suspicion of Hegio. He is accordingly somewhat confused at first by Philocrates' question, indicating, as it did, that the interview was about to close. This confusion causes him to repeat aimlessly the same words he has just used (391), me hic ualere ; but he suddenly rises to the occasion, and launches boldly out into words that will sound innocent enough to Hegio, but which are intended as a plea to Philocrates to remember the fidelity of his slave, thus left a prisoner. This effort of Tyndarus is a masterpiece. It is fully matched, however, by the reply of Philocrates. tute, etc. : tu alone would commonly be emphatic ; the enclitic -te makes it doubly so. The unusual emphasis seems to imply that the information about to be given would commonly be furnished by the master about his slave, rather than by the slave about himself. In this case, however, you (slave though you are) are to put on a bold face and tell him yourself. dicito : see note on 11. Here the act is not to take place till the supposed Tyndarus has reached his destination.

402. fuisse : i.e. nos fuisse.

403. me aduorsatum tibi : see App.

404. gessisse morem : have done the will (complied with the wishes) of. tamen : i.e. in spite of the aerumnae. With this position of tamen, cf. 187, 393.

405. neque . . . umquam deseruisse : have never been false to. med is the object, te the subject ; they are intended to be ambiguous.

Hallidie compares Shaksp. Henry VI. 1. 4, "the duke yet lives that Henry shall depose," and the oracle's reply to Pyrrhus : aiō te, Aeacida, Romanos uincere posse. Med is an accusative formed after the analogy of the ablative, which originally ended in d.

407. ut fueris : in apposition to haec, which itself refers to what has preceded.

408. quin te gratus emittat manu : that he will not (but that he will), in his gratitude, set you free. For quin, instead of ut non or qui non, introducing a consecutive clause, when the principal verb is negated, see A. & G. 319. d ; B. 284. 3 ; G.-L. 552. 3 ; H. 595. 5. emittat manu : for the classical manumittat ; literally, release from the manus, the manus representing the power of the master. This giving up of all claim to a slave was symbolized by a ceremony in which the master first took hold of the slave, as still his own, turned him about, and then released him from his grasp, a free man.

409. mea opera : by my own efforts, contrasting with tua opera in the next line.

410. uirtute : see note on 324.

411. liceat : will be permitted. He regards the success of the plan as assured.

412. genus : family, i.e. high birth.

414. ego : without any particular emphasis ; see note on 289.

415. nam : with reference to the merito.

417. quasi . . . esses : the tense of esses serves as a further blind upon Hegio. meus esses : probably to be read mēu' sses ; see note on 94, and App. nihilo setius : (i.e. than as if you were a slave) loosely thrown in without influencing the construction of the rest of the sentence.

418. mīhī ōbsequiosus : for the hiatus, see Introd. § 85 (g). See App. dī uostram fidem : for heaven's sake ! literally, ye gods, your protection ! An accusative of exclamation, to be accounted for as the object toward which the speaker's emotion is directed.

419. liberale : generous. Liberalis is a term that covers all the qualities of an ideal liber (freeman), who is supposed to represent a higher type of man than a slave ; it is accordingly to be translated by gentlemanly, noble, kind, generous, etc., according to the particular quality uppermost in the speaker's mind in each case.

420. uideas : probably used in the sense of you (any one) would see (at a glance). It is sometimes regarded as meaning you can see, but there is doubt whether the Latin subjunctive ever has such a force.

See App. corde: literally, from the heart. amare: sc. hos. quantis laudauit: the text is corrupt.

421. conlaudauit: has heaped praises upon; the con- is intensive. istic: for the classical iste; see Introd. § 87 (c).

421f. haud centesumam partem: not a hundredth part is apparently felt as meaning a hundred times less, and is therefore followed by quam, than; cf. the use of quam after dimidium, e.g. Liv. 45. 18, dimidium tributi quam quod regibus ferre soliti erant, etc.; after multipler, Liv. 7. 8, multipler, quam pro numero, damnum est, i.e. many times greater than, etc. Partem is an adverbial accusative, as in the phrases mean partem (on my part), maximam partem (for the most part).

423. quom: see note on 146. occasio . . . cumulare: for occasio cumulandi. An infinitive rarely depends upon a substantive except when a verbal idea is prominently involved in the substantive. The infinitive with occasio, however, occurs several times in early Latin; e.g. Poen. 1212; Pers. 725-726; Curc. 59-60; Ter. Phorm. 885.

424. erga hunc: to be taken with fideliter. ut . . . rem geras: by conducting things; literally, so as to conduct things.

425. Philocrates means that his efforts for the success of the plan will be as earnest as his wishes are sincere. opera: by my efforts. Possibly, however, opera here means in reality, actually. experiar persequi: experior with the infinitive, in the sense of conor, is a rare construction.

426. id: i.e. the sincerity of the words just uttered. laudō | Hēgō: the H prevents elision; see Introd. § 74.

427. me . . . Philocrati: a bit of humor which the audience would be sure to appreciate. probus . . . homo: fine fellow.

428. ei: ei. memet: one might expect ego as subject of faciam, understood; in memet the Iouem testem laudo is made to control the construction, with facturum (esse), understood. For the intensive -met, see grammars.

429. experiri: prove, put to the test. opera, factis: the former refers to the effort put forth, the latter to the things actually accomplished.

430-445. See App.

430. quo minus: one might expect a corresponding eo magis before animum aduortas uolo; the meaning is, I want you now as much more attentive as my previous words have fallen short of what I have wanted to say; literally, by how much less I have said than I wanted to, (by so much the more) do I want you now to listen. See App.

de te : to be taken with dixi, though the position of the phrase is unusual.

431. horunc uerborum causa : causā very seldom means on account of, except where this phrase virtually means for the sake of. It is used in such sentences as "I left the city on account of important business," but not in such as "I left the city on account of disaster." The present passage presents one of the extremely rare exceptions to this rule. cauēto (?) : see App. fuas : common in early Latin for sis; see Introd. § 88 (a).

432. cogitato : see note on 11. fide : guarantee. See App.

433. pignori : for security.

434. ne = lest. meo é : meo e.

435. te hic : the h prevents elision; see App., and Introd. § 74.

436. ducas, deseras : introduced, like ignores, by the ne (434).

437. neque des : neque instead of neue, because it is equivalent to et non instead of et ne; it negatives merely the word des, ne . . . deseras neque des meaning lest you . . . forsake and fail to give. reducem facias : restore; literally, make returned.

439. fac fidelis sis : originally in such cases the two words formed independent clauses, fac! sis fidelis! be faithful! do so! In the course of time the subjunctive came to be felt (as in passages like the present) to be dependent upon the fac. Later, a desire to make this dependence clearer led sometimes to the insertion of ut, e.g. Cic. Att. II. 4. 4. It is therefore incorrect to say that ut is "omitted" in expressions like fac sis; such expressions merely represent an earlier stage, nearer to parataxis. Cf. notes on 121, 360, 383. caue fidem fluxam geras : i.e. be sure to keep good faith with me. See B. 305. 2.

440. omnia : the emphatic position of this word is intended as a sly hint to Philocrates that nothing less than manumission should be the reward for the self-sacrifice that Tyndarus is making.

441. hunc : i.e. Hegio's son, whom you are to bring back. The use of hunc in referring to the son is justified by the fact that the son is the main object of thought, at least from Hegio's point of view, and Tyndarus is choosing his words with especial reference to the presence of Hegio. Hunc is commonly taken as referring to Hegio himself, but this makes it impossible to interpret inuenum inueni satisfactorily. inuenum inueni ; the son has already been "found" (inuenum) in the sense that they have learned of his whereabouts (see 335); he is now to be "found" (inueni) in the sense that a messenger is going to seek him out and bring him back. In the latter sense (though not in the former) he is still "lost" to Hegio. See the preceding note.

442. haec . . . opsecro : I make these entreaties.

443. fuas : see 431 and Intro. § 88 (a).

444. tu (before hoc) another instance of an unemphatic tu; see note on 289. The h prevents elision in tu hoc; see Intro. § 74, and notes on 55, 152, 169, 337. hoc age : mind you! These words are not to be translated literally. The phrase was originally used by the priest in charge of a sacrifice, as an order to the proper official to despatch the victim. It was accordingly the signal for all to observe a sacred silence. From this it came to be used merely to invoke attention. tu mihi : strongly contrasted. patronus . . . pater : because the speaker depended upon Philocrates to get him out of his trouble. See App.

446. satin habes : will you be satisfied? literally, do you consider it sufficient? facta si refero : if I turn to accomplished facts; literally, if I bring back done. For this loose use of the present tense (refero) for the future perfect, see Intro. § 95 (a).

447. ornatus : equipped, provided, i.e. accompanied by Hegio's son. ex sententia : to your liking; see note on 347.

448. numquid aliud (sc. uis) : nothing more is there? See note on 191. ut . . . redeas : depending upon the uis understood (and frequently expressed) with the preceding formula numquid aliud? possis gets its modal coloring from the subjunctive clause in which it stands. res monet : the nature of the case warns (me to do that).

449. a trapessita : we should say at the banker's, an idea which would be expressed in Latin by apud trapezitam (argentarium); but the Latin is fond of using phrases with reference to the point of view from which an act emanates, or a state is presented; e.g. a Romanis, on the side of the Romans; a tergo, in the rear; ab animo, in his mind (cf. Ter. Phorm. 340). For the spelling of trapessita, see note on 193.

450. eadem opera : at the same time; literally, by the same exertion; cf. the proverb "kill two birds with one stone." a praetore : from the commanding general; praetor is here used, apparently, in its original sense (prae + itor = the one who goes before). syngraphum : passport. Aetolia and Elis were at war. Plautus probably wrote sungrapum; the character y was first introduced in the time of Cicero; see note on 88.

451. legionem : army. This word comes from lego, and originally meant a gathering; then, in a military sense, a levy, an army; its common meaning, legion, represents a still further specialization.

452. bene ambulato: fare you well; fare in "farewell" originally meant go, travel.

454. expediui: receives the emphasis.

456. sultis: i.e. sì uoltis (later uultis); cf. sis for sì uis, and note on 110.

457. ecferat: with ec, instead of ex (= ec-s), cf. the Greek ἐκ. apparebo: i.e. am to be found.

458. ad fratrem: inuisere means to go to see; ad fratrem is to be taken with the idea of going involved in the verb, while the idea of seeing governs the accusative captiuos. modō: only, making an unimportant qualification of the statement just made. He says that he is only going to call at his brother's; with the exception of the time necessary for this, he will be found at home (apparebo domi). He means, of course, after the matter in hand is finished, and he therefore disregards the moment or two (cf. 505–506) spent at the praetor's. This adverb has both vowels short almost invariably in classical times, but occasionally, as here, in early Latin the final ō retains its original quantity. inuiso: for the loose use of the present for the future, see Introd. § 95 (a), and cf. the similar English use, "I am going to-morrow." See App.

459. eadem: sc. opera; see note on 450. adulescentem: Tyndarus.

460. tu: i.e. Philocrates. amittam: despatch. ei rei primum praeuorti uolo: that's the thing I want to attend to (literally, turn to) first in preference (prae) (to all else). The reference is to the procuring of the necessary passport (see 450 f. and 505 f.).

ACT III. SCENE 1.

461. edit: subjunctive for the classical edat; see Introd. § 88 (a).

463. esse: infinitive of edo. quod edit: to eat. The idea which he can eat would be expressed by quod esse possit. Something has apparently dropped out of this line, as it cannot be read metrically.

464. hercle: gad! lubens: notice the emphatic position, and gladly, too.

465. malignitate: stinginess; malignus is sometimes used as the opposite of largus, e.g. Bacch. 401. mihi: as far as I'm concerned.

466. ieiuniosorem: a word coined for the occasion; it agrees with hominem, which (with quam me) is easily understood. mag(is) ecfertum: probably s is here elided before the following e, just as m would commonly be. This is apparently a common phenomenon in Plautus (see App.). Possibly, however, neque should be pronounced with silent final e. See note on 359 and Introd. § 77. ecfertum fame: literally, stuffed full of hunger. The word ecfertum is of course chosen with reference to the usual propensity of a parasite. For ec-, see note on 457.

467. minus procedat: meets with less success. occeperit (for inceperit or coeperit): attracted to the subjunctive.

468. resident: resideo originally meant to sit back (and do nothing), to take a rest; then, as this was a way of celebrating a holiday, it came to mean to keep or celebrate, but this transitive use of resideo is extremely rare. esurialis ferias: hunger-holidays; esurialis is one of the many words coined by Plautus for humorous effects.

469. ilicet . . . crucem: the parasite business may go and be hanged! ilicet: see note on 286. arti: dependent upon the licet in ilicet. malam crucem: limit of motion after the idea of ire in ilicet. Probably at one time the accusative was freely used without a preposition to express limit of motion, but in historical times only comparatively few reminiscences of this use are preserved, e.g. domum, rus, names of towns and small islands, and such expressions as exsequias ire, infittias ire, malam crucem ire, and a few others; see Bennett, Lat. Gram. App. 311. 3. The crux was originally a pole upon which offenders were impaled; later, a cross to which they were bound or nailed. Often mala crux is used as a stereotyped expression, felt as a single word, which in turn could be modified by maxima, magna, etc.

470. ridiculos inopesque: (us) poor fools (merrymakers). It was the business of a parasite to entertain the company in return for his dinner.

471. nil morantur: care naught for; literally, make no delay (over); nil is the accusative of the "inner object," or of the "result produced." A. & G. 238. b; B. 176. 2; G.-L. 332, 333; H. 409 iam: any more. Lacones: parasites are thus called, apparently because they need all the fortitude and endurance of the Spartans to withstand the ill-treatment they get. unisubseli: a word humorously coined by Plautus. The triclinium was the couch extending around three sides of the table for the guests to recline on; the parasites frequently had to sit on a bench (subsellium) that stood by itself, which Plautus calls the uni-subsellium in playful allusion to the make-up of the term tri-clinium (cf. his similar coinage of ueriuerbio in 568); cf. Stich. 488. See App. uiros: heroes; notice the choice of uiros instead of homines, and also its emphatic position.

472. Plagipatidas : us Whipping-posts (as if referring to members of a prominent family); literally, the Buffet-bearer sons. quibus sunt uerba : who furnish amusement; see note on 651.

473. ederint : probably future perfect indicative. qui . . . reddant : people who will return the compliment. One should be on his guard against translating such clauses as this by who can return, an idea which probably lies outside of the sphere of the Latin subjunctive. See note on 346.

475. ipsi : i.e. instead of sending a parasite to do their disreputable errands. aperto capite : boldly, unblushingly; literally, with uncovered head; cf. the expression "bare-faced."

476. in tribu : referring to the comitia tributa. The purely Roman allusion is to be noted; also the hiatus.

477. terrunci faciunt : count worth a cent; literally, make of (the value of) a quarter of an as. Terruncius is sometimes spelled with a single r.

478. dudūm hīnc : the h prevents elision, and makes the preceding syllable long.

479. quo imus : for the indicative in questions of deliberation, see note on 208. Probably the s is here elided before the following una. See note on mag(is) ecfertum in 466, and App. prandium : the first substantial meal of the day, taken between the ientaculum (a slight repast soon after rising) and the cena, the dinner proper, which commonly came at about three o'clock. Perhaps luncheon makes the best translation for prandium.

480. hoc : the adverb, = huc. Both hoc and huc were probably different forms of the accusative singular neuter of the pronoun hic, just as istoc and istuc were both used as the neuter singular of the pronoun istic (= iste). This accusative was originally felt as expressing limit of motion, but after a time the two forms came to be regarded sometimes as adverbs; still later they were differentiated, hoc being retained as the pronoun and huc as the adverb. profitetur : volunteers. silent : when used strictly silere means to make no noise; tacere, to say nothing. Silere therefore includes the idea of tacere.

481. neque me rident : the parasite expected them to laugh at the good-natured impudence of his question. ubi cenamus : see notes on quo imus? and prandium in 479. abnuont : shake their heads; for the -ont, see Introd. § 86 (a), and notes on 8 and 81.

482. unum : hardly stronger here than an indefinite article ; English an, German ein, French un, etc., are kindred with the Latin unus. dictis melioribus : choice jokes.

483. menstrualis : for a month.

484. compecto : from compeciscor (compaciscor).

486. saltem : to be taken with dentes restringerent. si . . . arriderent : subjunctive apparently because the speaker is indirectly reporting the thoughts he himself had at the time of the experience referred to. dentes ut restringerent : by showing their teeth ; literally, so as to bind tight the teeth (i.e. by stretching the lips over them in a forced laugh). For the ut-clause, see note on 424.

487. me . . . ludificarier : that they are making fun of me ; literally, that I am being made fun of.

488. una res : always the same story.

489. in Velabro olearii : another distinctly Roman allusion. The Velabrum was a quarter of the city famed particularly for its provision markets. Oil formed one of the most important staples, and merchants frequently conspired together to keep up the prices to the detriment of the people. Ergasilus thinks that there is now a conspiracy against parasites.

491. obambulabant : were hanging around.

492. barbarica lege : barbarica means foreign. Here, in the mouth of a Greek character, it virtually means Roman, just as in the mouth of a Roman it might mean Greek. The particular law to which reference is here made is the one in the Twelve Tables, which prohibited combinations against public interests. certumst : I'm determined ; certum est (in which expression certum is the participle of cernere) strictly means it has been decided (by me). The regular participle of cernere, however, is cretus (found chiefly in compounds) ; the other form, certus, except in the expression under discussion, came to be used merely as an adjective. See note on 215a.

493. concilium iniere : i.e. have joined the conspiracy. The second foot of this line is a proceleusmatic, but the line may be corrupt. uictu et uita : from getting a living. Victus refers to the sustenance which makes life (uita) possible.

494. is : for iis (eis) ; cf. gratis for gratiis. diem dicam : i.e. set a day for their trial. ut . . . dent : in apposition with multam.

495. meo arbitrato : at my pleasure. quom . . . sit : the subjunctive is due to indirect discourse. sic egero : that's the way I'll fix 'em, have it out with them. The tense of egero is not a true future perfect, but is used for rhetorical effect to indicate energetic action and unceremoniousness; see notes on 194, 293, 341.

496. est illic: the emphatic position of est calls into prominence the idea that elsewhere there is not. Ergasilus proposes now to try his fortunes among the new arrivals at the harbor.

497. decolabit: shall fizzle out.

ACT III. SCENE 2.

499. bono publico: ablative of attendant circumstance. Hegio thinks his act will not merely give him back his son, but will redound to the public good by rescuing a citizen from slavery.

501. uident: the subject is indefinite, "they," "people," "my friends," or the like, and quisque is in partitive apposition to this subject; cf. "they each took one."

502. ita: anticipating the result expressed in 504; see note on that line.

504. uix . . . iam eminebam: I scarcely kept my head above board any longer, wretch that I was, in consequence of (the flood of) congratulations. The result of ita . . . reddiderunt is here expressed paratactically, where we might have had ut uix . . . iam eminerem; cf. "I was so tired I could hardly hold up my head," for "so tired that I could," etc.

505. abii: got away. ad praetorem: see note on 450.

506. ilico: on the spot; ilico is probably from in and sloco, the old form of loco.

510. protinus: forthwith. inde: i.e. from his brother's.

511. Philocratem: the object of nouerit. Its emphatic position serves to concentrate the attention at once upon the individual himself; the particular question asked about him follows as a matter of minor importance. ecquis: whether any one.

512. hic: with a gesture toward Aristophontes, another captive from Elis, who is accompanying him.

514. hunc: i.e. Aristophontes.

515. ut conuenias: in apposition with the antecedent of quod.

ACT III. SCENE 3.

516. nunc illud est, quom: illud refers to tempus, understood as the antecedent of quom, which was in its origin a case form of the relative pronoun. The more remote demonstrative illud seems to indicate a time previously anticipated and pondered over. fuisse : i.e. to be no more, to be dead; literally, to have been. See note on 243. nimio : very much; in its origin, nimio is ablative of degree of difference, but it came to be felt as an adverb. mauelim : the fuller form of malim; the subjunctive would be used here even in an independent clause; incidentally it may serve here to characterize the antecedent of quom (forming a predicating characterizing clause of the original type; see note on 12), as in Enn. Ann. 383 (Vahlen), nunc est ille dies quom gloria maxima sese Nobis ostendat, si uiuimus siue morimur, though this latter is a clause of the developed type. Cf., however, 518, where the indicative is used in a similar clause.

517. spernunt : here in its original sense of separate, a rare use.

518. hic ille dies, quom : see note on 516. See App. meae : mēae. sperabilist : i.e. sperabilis est; for the disappearance of the final s and the initial e, see note on captust in Argumentum, 1.

519. neque exitium exitio : the accusative exitium is governed by the idea of exire (construed with the accusative in the sense of evade, avoid), that is present in the verbal substantive exitio (nominative case), an evading. A similar phenomenon is occasionally met with in English, in expressions like "there's no evading death," where the use of "no" shows that "evading" is felt as a substantive, while the use of "death," instead of "of death," shows that "evading" is felt as partaking also of a verbal nature; see Introd. § 92 (a). The pun in exitium exitio is inimitable. neque adeo : nor yet; see note on 348. quae . . . aspellat : to drive away, or perhaps which shall drive away. Such clauses are commonly explained as akin to purpose clauses; but perhaps they are developed from an anticipatory use of the subjunctive, — a use common in Homeric Greek, but not preserved in Latin except in certain subordinate clauses (e.g. in subjunctive clauses introduced by antequam, priusquam, donec, etc.). See App.

521. See App.

521 ff. sycophantiis, perfidiis : acts of cunning, acts of treachery. Plautus is fond of plurals of abstract nouns; cf. Trin. 490, opulentiae; Most. 348, industriis. Plautus probably wrote sucopantiis; see notes on 88 and 450. obuiam : at hand.

522. neque deprecatio perfidiis, etc. : i.e. the consequences (to me) of my treachery cannot be averted by prayer and there is no escape from the consequences of my misdeeds; literally, neither is there unto my acts of treachery (any) averting by prayer, nor is there unto my misdeeds (any) escape. Malefactis and perfidis (both in the dative case) are, in a sense, personified; cf. 523, confidentiae hospitium, deuorticulum dolis.

523. nec confidentiae . . . hospitiumst : i.e. there is no longer anything for me to depend upon; literally, nor is there any hospitality (refuge) unto (for) my confidence; cf. Most. 350, nusquam stabulumst confidentiae. deuorticulum : place of refuge; literally, a turning-aside place, an inn.

524. See App.

525. palam est : is out. neque de hac re negotiumst : nor is there anything to do about this matter.

526. quin male occidam : to save me from a miserable fate; literally, but that I should basely perish; quin follows the idea of prevention implied by neque . . . negotiumst. oppetamque pestem eri uicem meamque : from meeting with disaster on account of my master and on my own (account). In saying meamque (uicem), Tyndarus apparently refers to his expectation that what he was doing for his master would result also in his own manumission (cf. 406 ff.). Perhaps our poet intended meamque to be uttered under the breath, as a sort of afterthought. Uicem with the genitive and uicem with the possessive pronouns (meam, tuam, nostram, etc.) are both common constructions, occurring sometimes together, e.g. here and Truc. 158, et nostram et illorum uicem. meamque : mēamque.

527. The only way to read this line metrically as it stands is to admit an anapaest and hiatus in the seventh foot; see App.

528. Philocrati : probably dative; but it may be a genitive, as Plautus forms the genitive of such nouns in -i as well as in -is; e.g. 975; Philocrati; Rud. 86, Euripidi; Rud. 822, Herculi; Bacch. 938, Achilli, etc.

529. Salus : Salvation (herself). This divinity had a temple on the Quirinal, and the summit on which it stood was called Collis Salutaris. si uolt : i.e. etsi uolt. nec copias : and there is no chance (for me).

530. nisi si : is common where nisi alone would have sufficed. corde : we should say, in my mind. machinōr : the final syllable here retains its original long quantity; see Intro. § 82 (f). astutiam : (some) clever scheme.

531. quam : i.e. quam astutiam. malum : confound it! malum is an accusative of exclamation; cf. "the mischief!" quid machiner : what shall I devise? a question of deliberation, anticipating, in reply, some expression of the will either from the speaker

(cf. incipisse in the next line) or from some one else. One should be careful not to use "can" in translating such questions.

531-532. maxumas . . . haereo: set on foot (some) huge piece of nonsense, (some) tomfoolery. nugas inepti(as): if the text is correct, the s must be elided, or else we must read ineptias. See App. incipisse: the speaker thus addresses himself in answer to the questions he has just put to himself. No promising plan of action, however, suggests itself at the moment, and in his despair he ejaculates haereo, I'm stuck! But at the critical moment, as will be seen below, a happy inspiration comes to him, and he rises to the occasion (547 ff.). The initial h of haereo prevents elision.

ACT III. SCENE 4.

533. quo . . . dicam: i.e. I wonder in what direction that fellow has hustled himself out of the house now! literally, in what direction shall I say that that fellow has, etc.; but the use of a word of saying under such circumstances is foreign to the English idiom. Cf. 268, 541, etc. nunc: the position of this word makes it probable that it is to be taken with proripuisse; the use of nunc seems to indicate that Hegio has had previous experiences with runaways and was suspicious (cf. 456 f.).

534. enim uero (also written enimvero): in very truth. Enim alone commonly means indeed, in Plautus and Terence, and occasionally even in Cicero and Caesar. eunt ad te: are after you.

535. quid loquar: what am I going to say? The following fabulabor and negabo make it probable that loquar also is here a future indicative, but the present subjunctive is much more common; cf. 531, quid machiner? In early Latin the indicative (but commonly the present indicative) is very common in deliberative questions; see note on 208.

536. omnis in incerto: omnis sometimes seems to have the value of only two morae and to have been pronounced ō-mnis. quid . . . confidam? what confidence shall I put? See App.

537. utinam . . . perderent: one might expect perdidissent of an unfulfilled wish referring to the past. prius . . . quam periisti: as perire frequently serves as the passive of perdere, there seems to be here a play upon words: O that the gods had taken you away before you were "taken away" from your fatherland.

538. qui . . . facis: the indicative is about as frequent as the subjunctive in causal qui-clauses; the indicative calls attention merely to the fact, without emphasizing its causal relation to the main clause ; the subjunctive serves to emphasize this relation and force it upon the attention. parata : well arranged ; imparatam : disarranged.

539. atrocem : outrageous.

540. hominem : for the construction, see note on 373.

541. quid . . . quod . . . te dicam fugitare : how (literally, what) is this, that I should say, etc. ; an awkward circumlocution for quid (cur) fugitas? Cf. a similar use of dicam in 533. Dicam is probably a subjunctive of obligation or propriety ; see App.

542. quasi . . . noueris : for the construction, see note on 181 ; noueris is of course equivalent to a present subjunctive (see note on 240).

546. qui . . . appelles : see note on 538 qui . . . facis.

547. hīc homo : the h of homo seems here to make the preceding syllable long ; the vowel of hic (the pronoun) is regularly short in Plautus. in Alide : the emphatic position of this phrase is intended to convey the impression, "his true character is not known here." See App.

548. auris immittas tuas : give ear to ; literally, send (let) into your ears, the auris being felt as the object of in in in-mittas, while -mittas takes as its object the antecedent of quod.

550. illic : i.e. ille. isti : dative. qui sputatur : which keeps spitting, i.e. the foaming-at-the-mouth disease (epilepsy). Sputatur is probably from a deponent sputor not recognized in dictionaries (see App.).

551. ultro : further away, a meaning of the word preserved only in Plautus. Ultrō originally meant beyond, to the further side (cf. citro, intro = to this side, to the inside) ; then besides ; beyond what is necessary, i.e. of one's own accord ; beyond what one would expect, i.e. actually. istum : the accusative is governed by the general idea of taking away that is suggested by ultro. No particular verb is to be supplied. ain : i.e. aisne, but it is merely a common formula expressive of indignation, wonder, or the like, and not a question to which any answer is expected : what do you mean! what's that! or the like. uerbero : you whipping-post (uerberare = to flog).

553. eum morbum mi esse, ut qui, etc. : that I have such a disease (literally, that disease) that it is necessary to spit on me ; literally, that there is need me to be spit upon. Epilepsy was apparently supposed to be cured by spitting upon the person who had it. With this superstition compare the practice, still in vogue among boys, of spitting upon their fish-hooks "for luck," while angling.

People of some localities similarly believe that spitting on coins will bring good fortune. Interesting in this connection are certain passages in the New Testament, e.g. St. Mark 8. 23, "And he took the blind man by the hand . . . ; and when he had spat on his eyes, . . . he asked him if he saw aught"; see also St. John 9. 6. The qui here is not the relative, but merely an intensifying particle, as in atqui (at qui); see notes on 28 and 243. me: possibly Plautus wrote med, in which case the d would be due to false analogy with the ablative; see notes on 240, 405. insputari: to be spit upon.

554. multos: many are the men whom, etc.

555. quibus: dependent not upon insputari, but upon fuit. fuit: the original length of the ū is here retained; cf. fūmus in 262; As. 782; Mil. 754; 1364; etc. is: dative; see note on 494. Notice the change, very common in Latin, from the relative to the demonstrative construction.

556. quid tu: how (literally, what) about you? With tu probably no particular verb was felt to be omitted. autem: starting with the meaning on the other hand, but, autem came to be frequently used (as here) by the comic poets, in questions prompted by a feeling of opposition, or reproach. It may be better translated by giving the question a proper tone than by the use of any particular word. etiam credis: can it be that you believe? literally, you even believe? Etiam is often thus used in impatient questions, implying incredibility. Possibly, however, etiam is here a temporal particle, equivalent to adhuc, still.

557. uiden: i.e. uidesne. For the force of -ne, see note on 121. tu hunc: the h prevents elision. intuitur: from the archaic intueor (= intueor); cf. Most. 836, 837 (optuēre), 838 (contui); for the mood, see note on 206<sup>b</sup>. concedi: for us to withdraw; literally, it to be withdrawn (by us).

558. Hégio: probably to be read with synizesis, Hégio, though synizesis of io in nouns is rare. fit: is coming on. See App.

559. credidi, extemplo: both emphatic by position, I thought he was crazy right away.

560. quin . . . ignorat: why, he doesn't know. Quin (qui + nē = why not?) and English why? came to be used merely to attract attention to surprising, or incredible, or particularly emphatic statements that are about to be made. It will be noticed that why, when thus used, is commonly pronounced w'y. qui siet: the later distinction between quis and qui does not seem to have been observed in early Latin. Even in classical times it is sometimes disregarded. The indicative in indirect questions (see note on 206 b) is most common in questions with an imperative, or with some form of the verb that makes it possible to treat the question as independent, e.g. dic quis est. This seems to indicate that such questions were not felt distinctly as indirect questions, but as not yet far removed from parataxis (dic! quis est?). Three stages of development may be assumed: (1) dic! quis est? (2) dic quis est; (3) dic quis sit. siet: for the form, see Introd. § 88 (a).

561. aibat: we use the imperfect in the same way, e.g. "some one was telling me the other day that you had been robbed. Is it so?" The view that aibat sometimes has the force of a perfect is quite unjustified. For aibat instead of aiebat, see note on seruibas in 247. haud uidi magis: a phrase used much like our ironical "I dare say!" literally, I have not seen (any one) more (so than he is).

562. Alcumeus, Orestes, Lycurgus: famous madmen of antiquity. Alcumeus: the Greek form is Ἀλκμέων (Ἀλκμαίων). In Latinizing Greek forms, the Romans frequently introduced vowels lacking in the Greek word; with the first u in Alcumeus, cf. Aesculapius (Ἀσκληπιός), techinae (τέχναι), mina (μνᾶ), drachuma (δραχμή). Alcumeus killed his mother. Orestes: he murdered his mother, Clytemnestra, and was driven mad by the Furies. Lycurgus: the Thracian king who was driven mad by Dionysus. postea, then; literally, afterward, i.e. after admitting that he is a comrade of mine, we must admit that all madmen are.

563. una opera . . . qua: just as much as; literally, by one (and the same) agency . . . by which; see note on 293. at: at sometimes introduces an expression of surprise, indignation, or the like; such feelings involve an adversative relation—opposition to what was expected. furcifer: gallows'-bird; literally, yoke-bearer. The furca was a fork-shaped frame which, for purposes of punishment, was put on the neck, and to the two arms of which the culprit's arms were bound.

564. non ego te noui? I do not know you (you say)? Non in questions frequently differs from nonne in implying surprise at the thought that a thing is not so, while nonne implies confidence that the thing is so; cf. "you do not think so?" with "do you not think so?" Nonne, however, is rare in early Latin. pol: gad!

566. The chiasmus in this line is noteworthy. eum ignoras: eum ignoras.

567. immo: see note on 209. ait: ait. qui non est: in early Latin a relative clause in indirect discourse, unless it depends directly upon another subjunctive, commonly takes the same mood as in direct discourse, e.g. 720; Ter. Phorm. 4, 9, 21, 251, 424, 481; Adelph. 14, 67 (bis), etc.

568. tu, etc.: emphatic, in you, no doubt, is found a man, who, etc. enim: see note on 534. qui superes: who surpasses, a predicating characterizing clause of the developed type (clause of characteristic); see note on 12. ueriuerbio: a word coined apparently by Plautus.

569. uera . . . conuincas: pervert (literally, overcome) the truth. uanitudine: empty lies.

570. agedum: come now. This enclitic -dum is akin to the dum which means while, etc., and was probably, in its origin, an accusative expressing duration of time, a moment. With imperatives it came to be used merely to emphasize the command. Cf. the German mal, einmal with imperatives; e.g. warte mal, just wait, wait once. em: well! here you are! calling attention to the fact that he has complied with the request just addressed to him.

571. Cannot be read metrically as it stands.

573. Alidem: for in Alidem; see Intro. § 92 (d).

574. quem patrem, qui: loosely constructed, as frequently in colloquial speech; the real meaning is "father" (say you) of one who is a slave? and the qui has for its antecedent the genitive that is suggested in the quem. The father of a slave was not legally recognized as such; a slave was designated not as the filius of anybody, but as the seruos of his master. et tu quidem: you, too, for that matter. Notice the clever manner in which Tyndarus turns the taunt of Aristophontes.

575. fuisti: are no longer; literally, were, see notes on 243, 516. fore: sc. liberum; while the preceding liber fuisti seems best translated by are no longer free, it strictly means, of course, you were free (the virtual meaning represented by the translation being due merely to the contrast with present time suggested by the tense); the construction fore (liberum) is therefore a natural one.

576. reconciliasso: equivalent to reconciliauero, shall have brought back; for the meaning of this word, see note on 33; for the form, that on 124 (faxis).

577. gnatum: sc. esse, which has possibly dropped out after gnatum, as the line is not complete as it stands.

578. Tyndarus purposely misconstrues what Aristophontes meant by liberum. Liberum: this suggested identification of Tyndarus with Bacchus is a touch that the audience would be sure to appreciate.

579. ut : how. te ludos facit : is making game of you ; literally, is making you (i.e. causing you to be) games.

581. qui uiuas : (anything) to live on ; literally, whereon you may live, a volitive characterizing clause ; see note on 12. For the ablative (or instr.) qui, see note on 28.

582. omnis similis : accusative plural. inueniri : i.e. to be made out to be. tui : for the similis constructions, see note on 116.

583. miserorum : A. & G. 214. d ; B. 198. 3 ; G.-L. 366. Rem. 1 ; H. 447. bonis : opposed to miserorum.

584. sis : i.e. si uis. insistas credere : persist in believing.

585. aliquid pugnae edidit : a slang expression, has been putting up some game (on you) ; literally, has put forth something of a fight.

586. filium tuom quod, etc. : this son of yours — his talk about ransoming him by no means pleases me ; literally, as to the fact that he says he is going to ransom your son, it, etc. ; for the loose use of the present (redimere) referring to the future, see note on 194. se ait : s(e)ait. ne utiquam : a reminiscence of the time when ne was used in the sense of not ; these two words are sometimes written neutiquam, but as the e of ne is regularly elided in Plautus, n(e)ut- being always short, it seems better to write ne utiquam.

587. scio : notice the exasperating emphasis. Aristophontes, in saying id ne utiquam mihi placet, intended the id to refer to the quod-clause (the fact that he says, etc.) But Tyndarus at once takes the id as referring to the return of Hegio's son : "of course you don't want his son returned ; I am well aware of that without your telling me." si di adiuuant : a loose use of the present tense for the future. It would be possible, however, to conceive of this as referring to present aid.

588. Tyndarus is trying to give Aristophontes a hint of what is really on foot.

589. propterea : that is the reason why. quin : w'y ; cf. note on 560.

591. esse : depending upon the idea of saying in exprobrare.

592. enim : see note on 534. iam nequeo contineri : can no longer contain myself (literally, be held together). heus : look out there ; Tyndarus construes Aristophontes' words as meaning that he could no longer restrain himself (contineri). audin quid ait : see note on 560. quin fugis ? why don't you run ? This line is unmetrical as it stands.

593. iam: in a minute. insectabit: will be chasing; cf. 552, where the verb is deponent. illunc: see Intro. § 87 (b). iubes: another loose use of the present for the future perfect.

594. comprehendi: arrested. fit opus: the fit is on, es geht schon los; literally, the work is being done.

595. uiden: for the non-committal force of -ne, see note on 121. maculari: is getting speckled.

596. atra bilis: such a condition of the bile was supposed to indicate madness; cf. μελαγχολία, melancholy, which etymologically means black bile. at: see note on 563.

597. pix atra: the inverted order of words, as compared with atra bilis, serves to heighten the contrast. The allusion is to a mode of punishment by which a slave was covered with pitch and then set on fire; cf. Juv. 1. 155; Lucr. iii. 1017. See App.

598. laruae: evil spirits; the word is always trisyllabic in Plautus, though dissyllabic in classical times.

600. habere: logically this has a causal relation to crucior; the infinitive depends upon the idea of thinking that is involved: I'm going distracted that I have not (i.e. at the thought of not having).

602. quaeritare: sc. eum; the subject of an infinitive is frequently omitted in colloquial Latin, even when it is not the same as the subject of the principal verb. solus . . . uolo: i.e. I want a private interview with you.

603. istinc: from where you are. tamen: with reference to the procul (though at a distance, still).

604. denasabit: a word invented by Plautus, and not found elsewhere: will de-nose. We should expect the present subjunctive in the apodosis; the future indicative is used to emphasize the certainty of occurrence.

605. insanum Hegio: initial H here prevents elision of the preceding syllable. creduis: archaic for credas; see Intro. § 88 (a).

607. uerum: see note on 269. uolo: I am willing, as often.

608. dum: provided that.

609. qui uolt: since he wants to. Tyndarus mischievously pretends to understand the uolo of Aristophontes (see 607) as meaning I want (to be bound). For the indicative in causal qui-clauses, see note on 538.

611. quid mi abnutas? why do you keep shaking your head at me (abnuto, frequentative)? Tyndarus is making desperate attempts to give Aristophontes a hint. quid agat, si: i.e. his behavior even now is betraying his guilt. Nothing but your presence prevents him from confessing the truth.

612. quid si adeam : Hegio's confidence in the supposed Philocrates begins to weaken. nugas : accusative of exclamation. ludificabitur : will make game (of you).

613. garriet, etc. : will rattle off what you will never make head or tail out of ; literally, (that) to which neither foot nor head will ever be visible.

614. quoi . . . compareat : a clause of characteristic (predicating characterizing clause ; see note on 12), referring to the future.

615. ornamenta absunt : Aiacem, etc. : the characteristic dress (of an Ajax) is lacking — (otherwise) when you behold the fellow, you behold a very Ajax himself, i.e. he is as much of a madman as Ajax ever was. Aiacem . . . ipsum : alluding to the madness of Ajax, caused by this hero's defeat in the contest for the arms of Achilles.

616. nihili facio : I don't care a fig ; literally, I make (it) of nothing (i.e. of no account). tamen : i.e. in spite of all the risk which, you say, is involved.

617. inter sacrum saxumque : between the altar and the stone, a proverb that originated at a very early period, when the victim for sacrifice was despatched by means of a flint-stone (Liv. 1. 24) instead of a knife. For another instance of sacrum in the sense of altar, see Curc. 471. quid faciam : an indirect deliberative question.

618. quod me uelis : uolo here, as often, takes two accusatives.

619. audibis : archaic for audies ; see note on nescibo in 265, and cf. note on 247.

620. hoc : ablative. me : object of expurgare. expurgare : for the classical expurgare ; cf. Mil. 497, Am. 909, Cas. 944 ; obiurgare, Trin. 70. tibi : in your eyes. insaniam : subject of tenere.

621. neque . . . neque : The infinitives are not in apposition with hoc, but depend upon the ideas of saying and proving involved in me expurgare uolo ; hence neque . . . neque, instead of aut . . . aut. nisi quod : except that ; for the original force of this phrase, see note on 394.

622. at : see note on 563. ita . . . ut : as certainly as. deorum : deorum. faxit : for the meaning of the perfect (aorist) tense in prayers, see note on 172.

625. quin : see note on 353.

626. deliquio : a nominative, occurring only here.

627. tu : emphatic.

628. fuistin : fuistin.

629. Tyndarus is now on the defensive. qui tu scis? how do you know?

630. qui : how. puerum . . . puer : I knew you when we were boys together; literally, I (when) a boy saw you (when) a boy.

631. ego . . . maior maiorem : I know you when we are men together (maior, literally older). em rursum tibi : there you have it, right back at you! an expression which is intended by Tyndarus to sound defiant, but which really betrays the desperation to which he is driven.

633. fuitne, etc. : was the father, etc. For the long ū in fuit, see note on 262.

635. Philocrati : the position of this word again forces upon the attention the fact that the man they have been talking with is not Philocrates.

636. quin quiescis : be still! literally, why aren't you still? See note on 592. i diirectum . . . ac suspende te : go straight and hang yourself; i diirectum seems to mean, literally, go stretched! (cf. abi diirectus, Poen. 160), and is itself sometimes equivalent to go and be hanged! In the present passage, the words seem to indicate despair rather than anger. Diirectum is probably to be pronounced diirectum.

637. tu sussultas (subsultas), ego . . . uix asto : addressing his heart in a melancholy attempt at a joke, here you are dancing a jig, while I am so badly frightened I can hardly stand up (asto, literally, stand by). Notice the strongly contrasted pronouns. sussultas : frequentative; literally, you keep up a jumping (throbbing).

638. satin . . . exquisitumst : may I depend upon what you say? literally, has that been sufficiently ascertained by me?

640. ubi ego minume (sc. eum esse uolo), etc. : i.e. here with me instead of on the way to Elis, as I supposed Tyndarus was, and as I wished him to be. Aristophontes' question was apparently caused by the fact that Tyndarus had for the moment dodged out of sight, but Hegio, by his answer, gives the question a different turn.

641. tum igitur : in that case then. deruncinatus, deartuatus : buncoed and bamboozled; literally, planed down, dismembered.

642. huius : huius. techinis : this was probably spelled tecinis in the time of Plautus; see note on 88.

643. uide sis : i.e. be sure not to mislead me; these words are here somewhat threatening in tone, like our "you'd better look out." quin : see note on 560.

644. quin : as in 643. magis hoc certo certius : more surely "for sure" than this, the certo being merely a repetition of the preceding adverb. Such a double comparative as magis certius is not uncommon in colloquial language ; cf. Stich. 704, magis dulcius ; Men. 978 ; Bacch. 500 ; and Shakspeare's "the more better assurance," (Midsummer Night's Dream, III. 1. 21), and "the most unkindest cut of all" (Julius Caesar, III. 2. 187).

645. inde . . . a puero puer : from the time when we were boys together ; literally, thence from a boy, a boy (himself). The phrase a puero is merely a closer definition of inde. puer : in apposition with Philocrates. This construction would commonly indicate that Philocrates is still a boy at the time the sentence is uttered, but the appositional construction is sometimes loosely used ; cf. Cic. de senect. 9. 30, Metellum meminī puer ita bonis esse viribus, where puer does not indicate that the speaker is a boy, but that he remembers that, when he was a boy, Metellus had, etc.

647. corpore : complexion.

648. crispus, cincinnatus : with hair curly and well crimped. Crispus refers to hair naturally curly ; cincinnatus to flowing locks artificially curled. conuenit : it tallies, i.e. your words correctly describe the appearance of the supposed Tyndarus, who has been sent to Elis.

649. ut quidem hercle, etc. : that I, confound it all, came out to-day under auspices most unfortunate! Such a clause is exclamatory in feeling, but is conceived of as also expressing the result (hence ut) of circumstances ; cf. Ter. Phorm. 772, ut stultissime quidem . . . rem gesserimus! that we have managed things like consummate fools! The ut-clause in our passage is sometimes explained as depending upon conuenit, which Tyndarus is then supposed to use for his own purpose with the sense of it is agreed, but after conuenit in this sense we should have had me . . . processisse instead of ut . . . processerim. Conuenit ut with the subjunctive might express agreement as to purposes that shall be attained, or determination that shall be carried out, but not agreement as to facts or events that are past. in medium . . . pessume processerim : the phrase in medium procedere is used of a man going out from the privacy of his home in the morning to begin his day's work. There was a common superstition that a man began each day either under good or under bad auspices, the influence of which lasted throughout the day ; cf. "getting out of the wrong side of the bed." Pessume here has reference to these auspices ; cf. Stich. 459, auspicio hercle hodie optumo exiui foras ; Epid.

183, liquido exeo auspicio foras, aui sinistra; Ter. Adelph. 979, processisti hodie pulcre.

650. morientur : i.e. will be broken.

651. uerba mihi data esse : I have been imposed upon; uerba dare means to give words (and nothing but words — words without any basis of fact), i.e. to practise deceit.

652. ut uos custodiam : Tyndarus is not so badly frightened that he cannot indulge in a bit of humor.

653. satin : i.e. satisne. This and similar passages are commonly interpreted as questions, but such an interpretation makes the use of satis seem very unnatural. The enclitic -ne has two distinct uses in early Latin : —

(1) as an interrogative particle ;

(2) as an emphasizing particle with the sense of uero, indeed.

Cf. e.g. Trin. 634, Lx. Egone? LE. Tune; Ter. Phorm. 153, adeon rem redisse, to think that things have come to such a pass! and many similar passages.

Satin is probably an instance of the latter use. illi hodie : the h prevents elision here, as often ; see Introd. § 74, and App.

655. nuculeum = nucleum; cf. periculum with periclum, Aesculapius with Ἀσκληπιός, etc.; see note on Alcumeus in 562.

656. stolido : an adjective agreeing with mi, fool that I was. sursum uorsum : upturned. Probably uorsum is here a participle modifying os, though the two words sursum uorsum are frequently used together as an adverbial expression meaning upwards. os subleuere offuciis : an expression said to have originated in the practical joke of painting the face of a sleeping person. It thus came to be used in the sense of make a fool of, hoodwink.

657. quidem : spends its force on hic and adds a contemptuous force. Colaphe, Cordalio, Corax : Cuff, Club, Knocker (modelled after κόλαφος, κορδύλη, and κόραξ). Plautus probably wrote Colape.

658. lora : the thongs with which Tyndarus was to be flogged. lignatum : supine. Lora were also used for binding together sticks of wood into a bundle suitable for carrying. The slaves, as a bit of pleasantry, asked whether, by ordering out the straps, Hegio intends to have them fetch wood.

ACT III. SCENE 5.

660. quid . . . negoti : what kind of business, what piece of nonsense? literally, what of business?

661. sartor : cultivator; literally, hoer. et messor maxume : and particularly (as you will soon learn to your sorrow) the reaper.

662. audebas : here used apparently in its original sense, to wish, to choose; see note on 238.

664. at : see note on 563. ut confidenter, etc. : not how boldly he has, etc. (which would be quam confidenter), but how he has boldly, etc. astitit : not from asto.

666. confidentem : trustful. Tyndarus plays upon the meaning of confidenter, which Hegio has just used in the sense of boldly, impudently.

667. sultis : see notes on 110 and 456.

668. has quidem : the use of the contrasting quidem implies that the speaker considers the hands of no account. uel : if you want to; uel was originally an imperative of uolo, and it commonly carries with it some suggestion of its origin, i.e. it indicates choice between things.

670. quod . . . fuit : so far as lay in your power alone.

672. deartuauisti : dēartuauisti; see note on 641.

678. fallaciis : emphasized by its position, that it was all through trickery that.

679. opera atque astutia : hendiadys.

680. id . . . suscenses mihi : are you angry with me over that? The id is difficult to explain. Possibly it is a loose use of the "inner object," is that your anger? though id strictly indicates the cause rather than the substance of the anger.

681. cum cruciatu : referring to the consequences to Tyndarus of his deed, not to anything attending the performance of it. tuo : in translating, one should bring out the emphasis attained by the position of this word.

682. parui : A. & G. 252. a; B. 203. 3; G.-L. 380. i; H. 448.

683. ast : seems to have meant, originally, furthermore; in early Latin it is chiefly associated with si clauses and used, as here, to add a second condition; cf. Trin. 74, si demutant mores ingenium tuom neque eos antiquos seruas, ast captas nouos, etc.; Lex Serv. Tull. (Festus, p. 230), si parentem puer uerberet, ast olle plorassit; XII Tables, V. 7 (Schoell), si furiosus escit, ast ei custos nec escit. In the Augustan poets and later prose, the word is used as a synonym of at; cf. also Merc. 246, Atque oppido hercle bene uelle illud uisus sum, Ast non habere quoi commendarem capram. The condition here introduced by ast would logically precede the condition si . . . peribo. redit: for this loose use of the present tense, see note on 446.

684. at: still.

688. ponere: expose.

689. Acherunti: locative.

690. The verb of the qui-clause is easily understood from the following periit; cf. Cic. Verr. IV. 53, cum aliquid a priuato nonnumquam, occulte auferebant. per uirtutem: i.e. in a noble cause; literally, by reason of his nobility. periit, interit: there is commonly no essential difference of meaning between these words, but interit is here used in a pregnant sense, implying that he still lives in the memory of his survivors.

691. exemplis = modis, as in Epid. 671, and often elsewhere; exemplum originally meant a model; literally, something taken out (eximo). Such a phrase as istoc exemplo (As. 389), after that model, easily came to mean in that manner; thus exemplum took on the meaning of modus. The word is frequently used of punishments that make "examples" of the victims.

693. uel . . . uel: i.e. I care not for the particular word you use. Vel was originally an imperative from uolo, and indicates freedom of choice. praedicent: from praedicare; the quantity of the penult (see Introd. § 39), as well as the sense, shows that it is not from praedicere.

694. The metrical structure of this verse is uncertain. The line is apparently corrupt. dicant: already felt as dependent upon interdico, but having its origin in an independent expression of permission, they may say (let them say, if they choose). uiuere: i.e. te uiuere. The subject of the infinitive is much more freely omitted in colloquial Latin than in more careful styles.

695. faxis: see note on 124.

696. affore: i.e. eum affore; see note on uiuere in 694.

697. pro: the interjection.

699. ad patrem: for apud patrem; see note on 49. See App.

700. aequè melius quoi uelim: for whom I have better wishes, literally, for whom I wish equally better. There is apparently a fusing together here of two expressions, viz. melius alone and aequè bene; cf. 828, adaequè fortunatior; Merc. 335, miserior nullust aequè; Mil. 551; Cas. 860.

701. mihi aegrest: cf. "makes me sick," in the sense of "disgusts me"; adverbs are frequently thus used with est; e.g. bene est, frustra est, palam est, etc.      dedisse operam malam : have done a bad turn.

703. uotuin : archaic for uetui (cf. uorto, uoster, etc., for uerto, uester, etc.). The answer "yes" is of course expected, but -ne itself contains no suggestion of this answer ; the effect is much the same as in did I, or didn't I, forbid you ? cf. 713, emitteresne necne ? and see note on 121. It was Philocrates, rather than Tyndarus, whom Hegio had warned (264) that he must tell the truth.

705. uera obessent : the pluperfect tense might have been expected, but the evil that would have resulted from telling the truth would have continued into the present.

708. custodem : i.e. paedagogum, whose duty it was to look after the children of the family.      erus maior : i.e. the father of Philocrates.

710. sorsum : i.e. seorsum.

711. siquis . . . faxit : the speaker starts out as though he were about to make his whole thought refer to future time, i.e. as if he were about to say, think, in case any one should do this for your son, how thankful you would feel ; the future imperative cogitato makes this the natural course of thought, hence si faxit (fecerit) instead of si fecisset. With haberes, however, the character of the thought is changed, and haberes is used as though si fecisset had preceded. Such mixed conditions are common in colloquial language. This si faxit (fecerit) is commonly explained as an instance of the perfect subjunctive in an unreal past condition, corresponding to the early use of the present subjunctive in unreal conditions, but no parallel instances of such a use of the perfect in protases seem to be found.

713. emitteresne necne : this is interesting as showing the really non-committal force of -ne in certain passages in early Latin where it is said to be equivalent to nonne ; see notes on 121 and 703. For the meaning of emittere manu, see note on 408.

717. quid tu : see note on 270.

718. recens : an adverb.      nuperum : no sure instance of this adjective occurs elsewhere.

719. te perdocere : for postulare with the infinitive and a subject accusative referring to the same person as the subject of the principal verb, cf. Trin. 237 ; Cas. 141 ; etc.

720. quicum . . . exegeram : relative clauses in indirect discourse, unless they depend directly upon another subjunctive, commonly take, in early Latin, the same mood as in direct discourse ; see note on qui est in 567.      una : an adverb.

721. ab eo : note the emphasis on this phrase,—'tis from him, then, that you should seek, etc. petito : see note on 11 ; the interval to elapse before the carrying out of the command is that between the time of speaking and the next meeting of Tyndarus and Philocrates. gratiam istam : thanks for that (literally, those thanks), i.e. for your fidelity to him.

723. latomias lapidarias : lapidarias seems superfluous, but is perhaps added to make it clear that latomias here refers to a stone-quarry and not, as it sometimes does, to a prison. Hard work in the stone-quarries was regarded among the severest punishments to which slaves were subjected ; cf. 730, 1000, etc.

724. octonos : i.e. eight each day.

726. Sescentopago . . . tibi : your name will be The Thousand-Striped-Man. Sescenti, six hundred, is frequently used in Latin to indicate an indefinitely large number, where we say "a thousand," "ten thousand," or the like. For the construction of Sescentopago, see A. & G. 231. b ; B. 190. 1 ; G.-L. 349. 5 ; H. 430. 1.

727. Aristophontes, who now understands the situation, no longer feels as he did toward Tyndarus.

728. perdis : for perdas : see Introd. § 88 (a). curabitur : will be looked after. Hegio pretends to understand perdis as meaning lose, instead of destroy, as Aristophontes intended.

729. custodibitur : for custodietur ; see notes on 265 and 619.

730. interdus : ante-classical for interdiu.

732. moriri : for the classical mori ; this verb is often treated in early Latin as belonging to the fourth conjugation.

733. fabrum : blacksmith.

734. huic : istum has just been used referring to the same person. For similar changes of pronoun, see 2, 112, 547, 1014 ; Mil. 22 ; Rud. 810 ; etc.

736. facite deductus siet : originally each of the verbs in such cases was independent, do (as I tell you) ! let him be led away ! In the course of time the subjunctive came to be felt as dependent, as in the present passage, whereupon ut came to be sometimes used ; see notes on 121, 360. The perfect deductus siet, instead of the present deducatur, is characteristic of energetic utterance ; cf. notes on 172 and 622.

737-738. ita curarier, nequi : to be so taken care of that he shall not fare worse in any way. It must not be supposed that ne in such clauses is equivalent to ut non. Ut non in the present passage would mean, that he will not ; ne must be translated that he shall not (an expression involving the will). Bennett regards ita (737) as meaning with this plan in view (viz. that, etc.). For the qui in nequi, see note on 28. quoi pessumest: who fares worst.

740. tuo stat periculo: stands at your own risk, i.e. if you do any injury to me, you will suffer for it when my master gets back; periculo is an ablative of price. For stare in this sense, cf. the English expression "stand one in" for any amount, and Verg. Aen. 10. 494; Hor. Sat. 1. 2. 122, magno stet pretio; Liv. II. 36.

741. quod metuam: that I should fear, a characterizing clause of obligation or propriety; see note on 12.

742. summam aetatem: extreme old age; literally, extreme of life. Life is at best so short that it matters little what I suffer here during my remaining years, as compared with the time after death when there is nothing to fear (cf. 741).

743. perferundi: for the more common perferendi.

744. salve: God bless you! ut dicam: object of meres.

745. ut meruisti, ita uale: may you fare as you have deserved.

749. peristis: you are dead men. nisi hunc: the h prevents elision. See Introd. § 74 and App.

750. uis: an outrage; cf. Suet. Iulius, 82, ista uis est.

751. illic: this is to be scanned, probably, as a monosyllable illic (see Introd. § 83); perhaps, however, illic. recta: (sc. uia) straight. phylacam: φυλακή was probably transliterated pulaca; see note on 88. ut dignus est: i.e. as he deserves.

754. quod absque hoc esset: and if it were not for this man here (viz. Aristophontes); literally suppose that it were without this man; cf. Cic. Off. 3. 19. 75, dares hanc uim M. Crasso . . . , in foro . . . saltaret. Absque is thus used in Plautus and Terence only before a personal or a demonstrative pronoun, with the imperfect subjunctive, to form the protasis of a conditional sentence. After Terence, there is no certain instance of this use of absque before Quintilian (7. 2. 44), and then not again till Gellius. The quod is the same quod that appears in quod si, etc., for which see A. & G. 156. b, 240. b; B. 185. 2; G.-L. 610. Rem. 2; H. 510. 9. mihi hoc: the h prevents elision; see Introd. § 74.

755. usque: right along. offrenatum: with a bit in my mouth; cf. our expression "lead by the nose."

756. quicquam credere: to put any trust.

760. surpuit: i.e. surreipuit; see note on 8.

762. maior: sc. natu. potitus hostiumst: see note on 92. scelus: calamity (originally crime; then, as here, the result of crime).

763. quasi . . . produxerim : see note on 181. in orbitatem : only to be childless still ; literally, unto childlessness.

764. hac : an adverb. neminis : in classical times the genitive neminis and the ablative nemine were no longer used ; their places were taken by nullius and nullo.

765. mei : mei.

766. exauspicaui : I set out with good omens. His release from his chains seemed to be an omen that this temporary freedom might become permanent. For the superstitious belief in auspicious beginnings, see note on 649.

767. redauspicandum esse . . . denuo : I must omen myself back again (Morris). Redauspicandum is a new coinage of Plautus, made for the sake of playing upon exauspicaui, which itself is not elsewhere found.

ACT IV. SCENE 1.

769. opimitates : the plural of abstract nouns is not uncommon in Plautus (see 522 ; Stich. 300 ; Trin. 490 ; Most. 340, etc.) ; here it seems to refer to the various kinds of property enumerated in the next two verses.

770. laudem : Ergasilus was to be the first to announce the good tidings. ludum : sport.

771. pompam : referring apparently to a procession of slaves loaded with provisions for a feast. See App.

772. nec : and not, but the “not” is to be taken with supplicare rather than with certumst : and it is settled that I shall not, etc.

773. Ergasilus could now procure for his friends opportunities to feast. By withholding such privileges he could (from a parasite's, point of view) ruin his foes.

774. The effect of the chiasmus and the alliteration should not be lost. Ergasilus now thinks better of the day than he did when (in 464-467) he felt like digging its eyes out.

775. sine sacris hereditatem : the reference in sacris is to private religious rites observed by individual families. The performance of these rites was a sacred duty which heirs were wont to inherit. As this duty naturally entailed trouble and expense, an hereditas sine sacris, an inheritance which did not carry with it any such duties, is an expression that came to be used of any unalloyed blessing, cf. Trin. 484. aptus : from apiscor (= adipiscor).

778. certa res est : the matter is settled. eodem pacto ut : in the same way as ; quo would be more regular than ut. comici : in comedy; cf. Cic. De Amicit. 99, comicos stultos senes, foolish old men in the play.

779. coniciam . . . pallium: one who was in haste would gather up his cloak and throw it over his shoulders, in order to allow freer movement to his legs. A slave on the run, with his cloak thus gathered up, is a common figure in comedy. Free men were expected to be more dignified than to run; see Poen. 522, liberos homines per urbem modico magis par est gradu ire. me hanc: the h here prevents elision. Possibly, however, Plautus wrote med.

780. aeternum . . . cibum: permanent board. There is hiatus in this verse after the fourth foot, and the final syllable of the foot in such cases has the privilege of syllaba anceps; see Introd. § 85 (a).

ACT IV. SCENE 2.

782. auctior: for the length of the ō, see Introd. § 82 (f).

784. id perspicere: see through it.

785. scibitur: for scietur; see notes on 247, 265.

786. extemplo: seems logically to go with loquentur.

787. doctus: wise (ironical, of course). verba data sunt: see note on 651.

788. The position of Ergasilus indicates surprise. Upon suddenly catching sight of him, the name comes first to his lips, and then the question: but Ergasilus — is this he, or isn't it? etc.

789. conlecto quidemst pallio: and in such a hurry, too; literally, he is of a gathered cloak indeed (he has his cloak gathered indeed); see note on 779. Conlecto pallio is an ablative of quality; the quidem, as usual, spends its force upon the word immediately preceding.

790. aps: abs (aps) is a form confined (except in compounds) almost exclusively to its combination with te. Even in this combination, it was almost entirely supplanted, in the last years of the Ciceronian period, by a. Later, when used at all, it was in affectation of archaic style.

791. nequis mihi obstiterit obuiam: that no one shall for an instant put himself in my way; obstiterit is from obsisto, not from obsto. Such uses of the perfect (aorist) subjunctive, referring to the future, are more common in dependent clauses than is generally supposed, e.g. Curc. 559, 764; Bacch. 598; Cas. 628; Mil. 333; Ter. Phorm. 554; Cic. ad Att. 2. 21. 1; Ovid. ex Pont. II. 3. 52. Though the perfect in such cases is commonly translated in the same way as the present tense would be, the Romans felt a very distinct and important difference between the two tenses; the perfect is energetic, emotional (see App.).

792. nisi qui . . . homo: unless any fellow.

793. ore sistet: will be put on his face (punning on obstiterit), will get laid out. This is commonly translated, will stand (get stood) on his head, but the reference is clearly to a knock-down; cf. pugilatum incipit and 796. Sisto is here intransitive, as in Curc. 287; Mil. 850, etc.

794. proinde: therefore. ut . . . sua: let all travel ways of their own; the emphatic position of sua seems to mean this way belongs to me. For the use of ut with the jussive subjunctive, see note on 115.

795. sui: the emphatic position of sui suggests, by way of contrast, this street is reserved for me; see note on sua in 794.

796. meus . . . pugnus: my fist; the emphatic position of meus is in keeping with the swaggering tone and manner of the parasite. The terms ballista and catapulta commonly designate the machines used for hurling missiles, but sometimes, as here, the missiles themselves; cf. Trin. 668; Pers. 28. The fist is here likened to the stone hurled by the ballista; the forearm, to the arrow shot from the catapulta.

797. genu . . . iecero: against whomsoever I shall have set (cast) my knee. For ad in the sense of against, see Ter. Heaut. 545; Prop. 3. 19. 9; Caes. B. G. 2. 5, 7. 70; an early poet in Cic. Nat. Deor. 3. 29. 73, etc. quemque: for quemcumque, just as quandoque is found for quandocumque; cf. 798; Mil. 156, nī hercle diffregeritis talos posthac, quemque in tegulis uideritis alienum, ego uostra faciam latera lorea; Mil. 160; As. 404; Merc. 20.

798. dentilegos . . . faciam: i.e. I'll knock out their teeth for them; literally, will make them all tooth-collectors. quemque: see note on 797. offendero: fall in with, come across (literally strike against), a very common use in Plautus.

799. quae . . . nam? nam is used to emphasize a question, and denotes emotion of some sort in the questioner; quaenam? differs from quae? much as "what in the world?" differs from "what?" The position of nam in the present passage is unusual, but cf. Bacch. 1114, quid tibi ex filio nam, obsecro, aegrest? Truc. 938, quae tria nam?

800-802. See App.

800. huius: huius. mei: genitive of ego, not of meus.

801. qui, etc.: i.e. the man who gets in my way will suddenly find that he has got in the way of his own life. opstiterit: (a future perfect indicative) this is primarily the verb of the principal clause, though it is felt as doing duty also for the qui-clause; cf. the position of periit in 690, with note. faxo: (i.e. fecero) I'll settle that in a hurry; for the form, see note on 124; for the energetic force of this use of the future perfect (not a true future perfect), see note on 194. Faxo is here parenthetical, without influence upon the construction of the rest of the sentence, as in 1010 faxo uenies; Men. 950, potabis faxo; Mil. 463, iam faxo hic erit; Am. 355, accipiere faxo; and often elsewhere; cf. Aul. 578, faxo perdidit; Trin. 64, faxo dederis; Men. 521, faxo comedereis.

803. Ergasilus adopts the airs and the language of a magistrate issuing an edict.

805. mira . . . sunt ni, etc.: well I declare, this fellow must have swallowed bumptiousness; literally, strange things exist, by Pollux, if this fellow has not, etc. Mirum est, it's a wonder if not (I shouldn't wonder if), is more common than mira sunt; but cf. Pseud. 1216; Trin. 861; Poen. 839; Am. 431. ni hic: the h prevents elision here, as often. in uentrem: confidentia would properly be taken in animum instead of in uentrem, but as the parasite is more likely to put things into his stomach than into his head, in uentrem is humorously used with reference to this characteristic.

806. uae misero illi: i.e. I am sorry for the unfortunate man who has had to give this fellow enough to eat and drink to put him into his present condition—he can't have much left. quoius: quoius. imperiiosior: i.e. so ridiculously imperious; literally, more imperious (than there's any sense in, than is often seen, or the like), too imperious.

807. tum: in the next place, with reference to prius in 803. pistores scrofipasci: pig-breeding millers; the case is attracted to that of qui; the genitive might have been expected, with eorum in agreement.

810. ex ipsis . . . exculcabo furfures: I'll knock the stuffing out of the owners themselves (instead of out of their pigs); literally, I'll stamp, or tread, out with my fists; the use of exculcabo in connection with pugnis adds a humorous touch. Furfur, bran, was frequently fed to pigs.

811. edictiones: for the usual edicta.

812. satur homost: exactly like our the fellow's full, except that satur has reference to the effect of food, rather than to that of drink. profecto: contrasted with mira edepol sunt ni in 805. confidentiam: see note on 805.

813. piscatores: for the construction, see note on pistores in 807.

814. aduehuntur: ride up.

815. odos: early form for odor; cf. arbos, labos, for arbor, labor. An original s between two vowels regularly became r; hence the original odosis, odosi, etc., became odoris, odori, etc., and after the analogy of such forms in the other cases the nominative odos became odor. Monosyllables like flos, mos, etc., resisted this change in the nominative. subbasilicanos: the arcade-loungers, sub- calling attention to the roof above them. A basilica was a large open building, the floor space of which was divided into aisles by rows of colonnades, and which was used as a hall of justice and as a public meeting place, serving, in some respects, the purposes of a modern "town hall." The first basilica mentioned as existing in Rome was the Basilica Porcia, built by Cato the Censor in 184 B.C., the year in which Plautus died. Plautus must here have in mind an earlier basilica, of which no account has been preserved. For Roman allusions in Plautus, see note on 34.

817. alieno naso: to other people's noses.

818-822. See App.

818. concinnant: not uncommon in Plautus in the sense of red-dere, make, render. liberis: little ones; literally, children; used here of the young of sheep to give a touch of pathos. Ergasilus is trying to heighten the enormity of the offences of which the lanii are guilty and thus enhancing his own merits in proposing to trounce them.

819. qui locant caedundos agnos: i.e. who contract to furnish the public with lambs that are to be fat and tender; literally, who contract for lambs as fit to be slaughtered. The emphatic position of locant is due to a design to contrast strongly the idea of locant with that of danunt—what they agree to do, with what they actually do. For another instance of caedundus in this sense, see Aul. 567, where Megadorus, upon being accused of having bought a lean and unsuitable lamb for a feast, replies caedundum conduxi ego illum, I bought (contracted for) that lamb as one fit for killing (i.e. for eating). See App. duplam agninam danunt: give the public twice as much lamb (as they agreed to), i.e. lamb twice as old—old sheep instead of genuine lamb. Another interpretation is commonly given, but see App. danunt: archaic for dant; nequinont occurs for nequeunt, and obinunt (for obeunt) is mentioned by Festus; cf. also the n in cer-n-o, li-n-o, si-n-o, etc., as compared with their perfects creui, liui, siui, etc.

820. petroni: Ergasilus probably has in mind the connection of this word with petra (πέτρα), a rock, implying that the flesh is tough.

822. mortales: beings, creatures; as the word, however, is commonly used only of human beings, mortales may be intended as a touch of humor.

823. eugepae: | edictiones: for the hiatus, see Introd. § 85. aedilicias: the duties of the aediles included the regulating of the traffic in the markets (the testing of the weights, measures, the quality of goods, etc.) and the care of the streets. Ergasilus has been talking as though these things were in his charge. hicquidem: always hicquidem in Plautus. habet: is issuing; cf. orationem habere, to deliver an oration.

824. Plautus seems to forget for the moment that his Hegio is himself supposed to be an Aetolian. mirum adeost: it is strange enough; literally, it is strange to that degree; cf. the similar English use of "so" in the sense of "very," e.g. "it is so strange!" For the different senses of adeo, see note on 348.

825. regalior: right royal.

826. tantus . . . commeatus . . . cibus: such abundant supplies in the line of eatables; literally, so great supplies, food (I mean); cibus is in apposition with commeatus. in portu: cf. such English expressions as "my ship has come in," in the sense of "I have received a supply of money"; but the expression may be chosen here because it is by bringing to Hegio the news of Philopolemus' arrival in port that Ergasilus expects to fare so handsomely.

828. qui: ablative; see note on 28. adaeque . . . fortunatior: see note on 700. This line is probably corrupt. As it stands, it can be read metrically only by supposing it possible to scan quí hōmī|nē ā|daeque, or quí hō|mīnē ād|aeque. With hominē may be compared militē (?) in Pseud. 616; carnē in Capt. 914; punicē in Pers. 41; parietē in Cas. 140.

829. illaec: for illa; see Introd. § 87 (b). illic: for ille; see Introd. § 87 (b). mihi: the emphatic position betrays Hegio's surprise at hearing his own name connected with the parasite's strange behavior.

830. aperit: for the present tense, instead of the future, see 446 and 683. This line is apparently incomplete. Probably something has dropped out.

831. hic: this pronoun is regularly short in Plautus. Here the syllable is made long by the following h. For the hiatus see note on 331 and Introd. § 85. ambas foris: referring, of course, to the two leaves of the door. Ergasilus needed plenty of room in his present inflated condition.

833. perlubet: I should like very much. hominem colloqui: the construction of colloquor with the accusative is rare except in Plautus. Other writers would say cum homine colloqui. Ergasilum: the position of this word gives much the same emphasis as in "Ergasilus!—who calls Ergasilus?" qui: the later distinction between quis and qui does not seem to have been observed in early Latin. Even in classical times it was sometimes disregarded.

834. nec facit nec faciet: plays upon the two meanings of respicere; (1) look back at, in which sense Hegio has just used it; and (2) have regard for, be propitious to.

835. mihi: I assure you.

836. quantumst . . . optume: (where one might expect omnium hominum qui sunt optimorum optume) thou best of all the best men who exist; literally, as much as exists of men, thou best of the best (of them); cf. Rud. 706; Ps. 351; Ter. Phorm. 853. Similar expressions of quantity, where one might expect an expression of number, are common in Catullus and elsewhere. in tempore: in the nick of time. See App.

837. nescioquem: nescio quis came to be felt merely as forming an indefinite pronoun. In this use all consciousness of nescio as a verb seems to have been lost; even in Ciceronian Latin the expression is followed by the indicative, rather than by the subjunctive of indirect question. In this use the o of nescio is short; as an independent word, nescio forms a cretic (nēscīō), though exceptions to this rule may be found. ubi cenēs: (some one or other) to dine with; literally, with whom you may dine, a volitive characterizing clause; see note on 12. Ubi is frequently used in the sense of apud quem, just as unde is used for a quo. eo fastidis: that is why you are putting on airs.

838. cedo: an imperative form, give here, here with, out with, or the like; plural cette (for cedite?).

839. quid . . . gaudeam? a question of obligation or propriety; see note on 353. gaude modo: modo is frequently thus added to an imperative for emphasis, where we use "just."

840. This line is apparently incomplete. See App.

841. iam: see note on 251. omnis maculas: corresponding to the English "every speck."

842. quod gaudeam: on account of which I should rejoice, a characterizing clause of obligation or propriety; see note on 12. As the ablative case originally ended in d, quod, in cases like this, may be a reminiscence of this early ablative form, though it is sometimes explained as an accusative; see App. The antecedent of quod is certainly felt as the cause of the rejoicing; cf. Ter. Phorm. 263, nihil fecit quod suscenseas, he has done nothing on account of which you should be angry; Cic. de Senect. 5. 13, nihil habeo quod accusem senectutem. If quod is an ablative, cases like istuc in Am. 1100, istuc gaudes, and id in Ter. Phorm. 259, an id suscenses illi? are you angry at him for that? will have to be explained as due to analogy with quod which was wrongly understood as an accusative.

843. bene facis: this phrase is commonly used in the sense of thank you, but it seems here to retain something of its literal meaning. quid iubeam? order what? ignem ingentem: Ergasilus is thinking of the dinner he is going to have. fieri: for the length of the i, see Introd. § 82 (i).

844. magnus ut sit: that it is to be (shall be), depending upon dico, which is here a verb of ordering; we use "tell" in the same sense.

846. iubēn: i.e. iubesne. astitui: to be put in position. aulas: old form for olla.

847. laridum atque epulas: this use of atque to add a general to a special term is not uncommon; see App. foculis: from fōculum (fouiculum, from fouere) a warming pan, not from fōculus (diminutive of fōcus), a little fireplace. This form with long ō is not properly recognized in dictionaries.

850. scis bene esse: you know how to have a good time; with bene esse compare Men. 485, minore nusquam bene fui dispendio; Truc. 741; Merc. 582. unde: the wherewithal; literally, whence, (that) from which; the subject of sit is the antecedent of the relative pronoun involved in unde. pernam: here probably the name of a fish; see Plin. 32. 11. 54. Observe the hiatus after pernam. ophthalmiam: probably Plautus himself wrote optalmiam; see notes on 88 and 274.

852. nominandi istorum . . . copia: a chance to name those dishes; literally, a chance of the naming of those. The gerund partakes of the characteristics of both a verb and a noun; in nominandi (with an objective genitive) the noun-characteristic appears more prominently, the gerund approaching the meaning of nominationis; cf. Ter. Heaut. 29, nouarum spectandi copiam; Lucr. 5. 1225; Cic. Inv. 2. 1; Fin. 5. 7. The English present participle shows a tendency toward a similar development; cf. "he believes in doing good," and "he believes in the doing of good"; in some localities are heard expressions like this last, without the definite article, e.g. "in doing of it."

853. mea : emphatic, that it is on my own, etc.; i.e. it is the good news I am bringing to you that makes me so elated.

854. ne frustra sis : don't fool yourself. Perhaps, however, this ne-clause is subordinate.

855. tui cottidiani uicti uentrem : an appetite for everyday fare; literally, the stomach of your daily living. uicti : substantives of the fourth declension commonly in early Latin have their genitive in -i (rarely -uis), e.g. senati, quaesti, etc.

856. quin : for this use, see note on 560. ita faciam ut . . . cupias : I will make you desire; literally, I will bring it about so that you would desire; cupias serves as the apodosis of etsi uetem, as well as to express the result of ita faciam. If the text is correct, faciam ut is to be read without elision. See App.

857. tu ne : yes, you; ne seems to be the asseverative particle nē, instead of the enclitic -ne; cf. Most. 955; Stich. 635. The particle, however, commonly precedes the pronoun. tum . . . igitur : in that case, then. tu mi . . . erus es : i.e. I am yours to command. immo beneuolens : nay, your well-wisher (rather); on the meaning of immo, see note on 209.

859. cedo : see note on 838. em manum : for the construction of manum, see note on 373. nil sentio : literally, I have no perception of the fact (nil being accusative of the "inner object," or the "result produced"); for the sake of preserving the pun, one might translate this, I do not think it, and the next line, to be sure you are not in a thick-et, that's why you do not think it.

860. For the pun, see note on nil sentio (859). Probably esse in senticeto was proverbial, meaning to be in trouble; non es in senticeto would then have much the same force as "you are out of the woods," i.e. your troubles are over — Philopolemus has returned. It can hardly be supposed that such an expression is dragged in merely for the sake of the pun.

861. ad rem diuinam : i.e. for the performance of sacred rites in honor of the son's return.

862. proprium : special.

863. deorum : deorum. summus : most high.

864. idem ego sum : I am also; literally, I the same am. Laeitia : gladness, that shows itself in the face, manner, etc. Gaudium : joy, that may be too deep-seated to be seen by the observer. Both are here personified as deities.

865. deum : the h prevents elision. Probably deum is here monosyllabic by synizesis. See App.

866. uidere : i.e. uideris. miquidem esurio : it's for myself (in my own interest) that I'm hungry. Ergasilus, in jest, pretends to misunderstand Hegio's mihi as modifying esurire (instead of uidere, as Hegio intended). Notice that mi in miquidem is short; cf. siquidem (920).

867. tuo arbitrato : as you please, at your pleasure, expressing a willingness to acknowledge the truth of the last words of Ergasilus. facile patior : meant by Hegio in the sense of I readily grant it, i.e. I know you well enough to grant that, when it comes to eating, you are "in it" for yourself only. consuetu's puer : Ergasilus pretends to understand Hegio's words (facile patior) in an obscene sense, I readily submit, and replies I suppose so; you had the habit when a boy.

868. Iuppiter . . . perdant : the use of perdant (perdat, perduint, etc.) in curses, though extremely common, is confined almost exclusively to make-believe curses, that are not really meant by the speaker; hence the present tense is regularly used instead of the perfect; see note and App. on 172. te hercle : Ergasilus begins as though about to utter a curse against Hegio, in reply to the latter's curse against him. All of this is of course good-natured raillery, and Ergasilus, after an insinuating pause, substitutes for the expected perdant an utterance of a very different character; te becomes the subject of agere, instead of the object of perdant. aequomst : an English-speaking person would be likely to say, it would be proper, but it must not be supposed that est in such an expression was felt as we feel "would be." The Latin est means merely is; in the present passage, for instance, the conception is the proper thing to do is to thank me (thanks are due me instead of curses). See note on 61.

870. nunc tu . . . places : i.e. I am now ready to accept your invitation. Heretofore Ergasilus has had his doubts about the character of the dinner he was likely to get at Hegio's (cf. 179 ff. and 497) and has been waiting and hoping for a more promising invitation. Now, however, he feels sure that the good news he is about to announce to Hegio will incline the latter to give him of his best. post tempus : behind time; Hegio means that his misfortunes have left him in no mood for a feast.

871. igitur : connected with the demonstrative pronoun is, and originally meaning, in that case, at that time; the si-clause seems here to be in apposition with the demonstrative idea in igitur : in the following case, viz. if I had come some time ago, then, etc., cf. Mil. 772, quando habeo, igitur dabo. Igitur is sometimes used in connection with deinde and demum; e.g. Rud. 930, ubi liber ero, igitur

demum instruam agrum. olim: formerly, sooner, i.e. before I had heard good news for you. istuc: referring especially to abi.

873. saluom et sospitem: safe and sound; et must be regarded as connecting merely the two terms of this couplet, the couplet itself being added as a unit to uiuom; et is seldom used to add the last term of a series, when the other terms are without connectives.

874. publica celoce: packet boat. illum adulescentulum: i.e. Philocrates.

875. una: with him.

877. in malam rem: to the deuce. ita . . . amabit, . . . ut: this is a common formula for solemnly certifying to the truth of an assertion, though the subjunctive ita . . . amet, ut is more common. In the present passage the future indicative and the subjunctive are found side by side; cf. condecoret in the next line. In the case of this future indicative, the conception seems to be, is going to bless (love) me according as I have actually seen (and, therefore, speak the truth), implying that if I am saying that I have seen, when in reality I have not, then I have no hope of being blest; hence, you may be sure my words are true. sancta Saturitas: St. Cramfull; humorously personified as the goddess whom the parasite serves.

878. itaque . . . cognomine: i.e. may I always be called Cramfull with as much truth to the reality; Plautus probably has in mind here such names as Saturio (a parasite in the Persa has this name). Cognomine seems here used as a general term, without reference to its distinction, when strictly used, from praenomen and nomen.

879. genium: good angel; see note on 290. In calling Philopolemus his genius, Ergasilus is thinking of the sumptuous dinner he is expecting to get in consequence of the former's return.

880. Alidensem: Elean; from Alis for Elis, corresponding to the Doric Ἰἶλις for Ἰἶλις. μὰ τὸν Ἀπόλλω: μὰ in Attic Greek is used chiefly in negative oaths, no, by —, but occasionally, as here, it is used affirmatively, yes, by —.

881. gnatum: see note on 19. ναὶ τὰν Κόραν: (yes) by Cora. Cora is another name for Proserpina, the queen of the lower regions; but it was also the name of a town in Latium, a coincidence which suggests to Ergasilus the idea of swearing by several other towns in Latium (Praeneste, Signia, Frusino, and Alatrium), as though they, too, were goddesses. Ergasilus' indifference to the real gender of these town names and the consequential airs he gives himself by swearing in Greek, instead of Latin, add touches of humor to the scene.

882. iam diu: now long since, to be taken with the preceding surripuit. The idea is so improbable that Hegio thinks there must be some mistake about it. Diu commonly means for a long time, but frequently in early Latin, and occasionally later, it is used as in the present passage, in the sense of long ago. See App.

883. uide sis: careful now; literally, see to it, please (that you do not deceive me).

884. tu: emphatic. barbaricas: i.e. Italian; see note on 492. enim: see note on 534. asperae: rude, "tough," a joke at the expense of the towns mentioned, which were at the time very unpopular at Rome. Asperae may refer to the rude character of the people or their language, or possibly to the rugged character of the sites of the towns.

885. autumabas: viz. in 188; cf. 497. uae aetati tuae: woe be unto you! literally, woe to your life. Vae here forms an exception to the rule that monosyllabic interjections are not elided.

886. quippe quando: (you may well say "woe be unto you") since, indeed, etc. Quippe is frequently thus used with causal particles and causal relative clauses, for greater emphasis. mihi nil credis, quod, etc.: you grant me no confidence in what I say in all earnestness; nil is the accusative of the "inner object" ("result produced"); that with reference to which no confidence is felt is the antecedent to be supplied for quod. Such an antecedent might be in the genitive case, as seen from passages like the following: Asin. 459, quod omnium rerum ipse semper credit; Truc. 307, numquam mihi quisquam posthac duarum rerum creduit.

887. Stalagmus: the person is thrust upon the attention first, the question about him follows, just as in English we might say, "this Stalagmus—of what nationality was he?" quoius: quoius. abit: in early Latin the historical present is often found after quom, as well as after postquam; see 282; Am. 668; Stich. 511; Epid. 217; Most. 25; Men. 1054, etc.

888. boiam terit: he's a captive; literally, he wears a boia, i.e. a wooden or iron collar put about the neck of prisoners; but Boia means also a Boian woman (the Boii were a people just south of the Po), and Boiam terit, therefore, means also he has a Boian wife, or a Boian woman has taken him captive; it is with reference to this double meaning of the phrase that Ergasilus playfully says, Boius est, he's a Boian now.

889. liberorum quaerundorum: alluding to his propensity for acquiring children, shown in his having stolen Hegio's little boy.

891. gnatus: (sc. esse) here a participle; see note on 19.

892. ain tu: (i.e. aisne tu!) merely a formula expressive of indignation, wonder, or the like, what do you mean, sir? It is here prompted by Hegio's si uera autumas. etiam, sancte quom . . .

iurem: when I would take even a solemn oath (if asked to do so); etiam sancte is given an emphatic position for the purpose of contrasting his present mood with his previous inclination to jest in taking oaths (881 ff.). For other interpretations, see App. The mood of iurem is due to the fact that it is felt, virtually, as the conclusion of a "contingent" ("less-vivid-future," "ideal") condition; it is uninfluenced by quom, which in Plautus takes the indicative (see notes on 146 and 244).

896. nam: (a very proper thing to do) for. nisi mantiscinatus probe ero: if I shall not (prove to) have given an honest report; the meaning, however, of mantiscinatus (a word occurring only here) is doubtful.

898. unde id: at whose expense is that to be done? literally, whence is that? The id refers to the whole idea of dapinabo uictum, rather than to uictum alone (hence id instead of is), but the question seems rather pointless after the assurance just given by Hegio. Ergasilus is, however, using the formalities of a legal bargain (stipulatio) and he wants to make sure that there will be no misunderstanding.

899. ego tuom tibi: notice the emphasis obtained by the juxtaposition of these pronouns. respondeo: I promise (assure you) in return; the word here has its etymological meaning, with a play, of course, upon its usual sense.

900. cura: used absolutely, manage. quam optume potes: as best you can; potes is frequently omitted in such cases. bene ambula: see note on 452.

ACT IV. SCENE 3.

901. illic: probably to be pronounced illic; see note on 751. See App.

902. iam: see note on 251. ut: how. collos: collus is an anteclassical form for collum. tegoribus = tergoribus (from tergus).

903. The alliteration is noteworthy in this and the following verses.

905. laniis lassitudo: because the lanii will be kept so busy.

906. nam: (enough of this) for. This is the usual interpretation, but it is possible that nam in such cases is, like enim, used in the sense of indeed. morast: see note on 61; cf. Poen. 921; Men. 760.

907. pro: in virtue of. ius dicam larido: pass sentence upon the bacon.

908. indemndatae: unsentenced. auxilium ut feram: i.e. release them from their present predicament; they were hanging up, like so many culprits.

ACT IV. SCENE 4.

909. Diespiter: an old name for Jupiter. B. App. 180. 4.

911. -que: joining clades and calamitas into a unit, to which intemperies is added without connective.

912. Something has apparently fallen out of this line.

913. nimis . . . male formidauī: was very badly frightened at.

914. adueniens: upon his arrival, i.e. after his arrival; see note on 9. If strictly used, the participle should here mean while in the act of arriving. The English present participle is frequently used of action prior to that of the principal verb; the Latin only rarely. carnē: the quantity of the ē should be noticed; see Introd. § 82 (c), and note on 828.

916. nisi quae: except those which (literally, unless any); cf. note on 394.

917. percontabatur: kept asking, implying impatience. possentne seriae feruescere: as shown by the position of the words, the emphasis lies on possent, and betrays some such tone as in "can we by any possibility set the pickle jars to boiling just as they are?" Seriae were apparently large jars used for storing meats, as well as wine and oil; Ergasilus wanted to cook their contents whole.

918. rēclusit: a mute with a following liquid does not make quantity in Plautus; the length of the rē here is probably due to the fact that the fuller form was redclūsit; rēduco, rēlatum also occur.

919. adseruate: watch.

920. sīquidem: for a similar shortening of a long accented syllable before quidem, see mīquidem in 866. sese uti: uti alone would be more common with uolet; sese is apparently used to heighten the emphasis and contrast already produced by sibi.

921. nam hic: the h prevents elision; hic is an adverb.

ACT V. SCENE 1.

922. deis: dēis.

923. quom: that; this explicative quom must not be confused with the causal quom, from which it is distinct in origin and development; the latter, in classical times, regularly took the subjunctive, while the former was at all periods of the language construed only with the indicative. See note on 151. reducem: redux is probably not from re(d)ducere, but from redeo; cf. trux from terreo. See App.

926. hunc: Stalagmus.

927. haec . . . fides: i.e. the fides of Philocrates. Cf. eam potestatem (934) for eius rei potestatem. See App.

928. ex animo et cura: from deep-seated anxiety; literally, from the heart and from anxiety, apparently a case of hendiadys. With ex animo cf. the English expression, "from the bottom of my heart." lacrumis: earlier form of lacrimis.

930. hoc: the business in hand; hoc agamus is apparently used here in its literal sense, but see note on 444.

933. immo: see note on 209.

933 ff. The meaning of immo potes, etc. (933 ff.) is as follows: nay, not so, father; you are able to and always will be able, and so shall I, and the gods will always give us the power of suitably rewarding our benefactor, just as you, father mine, are able to do most suitably to this fellow here.

934. dī ēām pōtēstātem: for dī, see Introd. § 85 (h), and for pōtēstātem, see Introd. § 84.

935. ut . . . muneres: in apposition with eam potestatem. bene merenti nostro: our benefactor. The phrase bene merenti is apparently felt as a substantive modified by nostro.

936. tu: the emphasis implies that the speaker himself would feel quite unable to invent a suitable punishment for Stalagmus; but he is sure he can trust his father to rise to the occasion. huic: i.e. Stalagmus; cf. hunc in 926. pater mi: father mine; this use of mi is chiefly confined to tender and affectionate expressions.

937. qua negem: a predicating characterizing clause of the original type (see note on 12): with which I should refuse (whatever you should ask, i.e. if you should ask anything whatever). The negem, besides being the verb of the characterizing clause, serves also as the apodosis of the protasis implied in quicquid roges.

938. postulo: Hegio's word had been roges; Philocrates substitutes a less deferential word, and he gives it the emphatic position, all of which seems to indicate that Philocrates now realizes that he is master of the situation. In 942 Hegio uses orabis. reliqueram: i.e. had done so prior to the time when he was hunting up Philopolemus in Elis. The perfect tense would seem more natural to us, but see note on 305 and App. thereto.

941. quod . . . fecisti, referetur gratia: the quod is probably relative, its antecedent being somewhat vaguely understood with gratia, thanks will be rendered for your kindness; literally, (for that) which you have done well.

942. id et: taking up again the id before quod; such repetition is common in colloquial language.

943. quod ego . . . ei feci male: contrasted with quod bene fecisti in 941.

945. data esse uerba: see note on 651.

946. euenisse: exclamatory infinitive, to think that, etc.

947. ne duis: a milder form of prohibition than ne with the perfect subjunctive, and here meaning merely you need not give; for the form duis see Introd. § 88 (a).

951. statua: i.e. Stalagmus.

952. quid sit factum filio: what has become of, etc.; literally, what has been done with, etc.; filio is an instrumental ablative.

953. lauare: this reflexive use of lauare is not common. hac: adverbial.

ACT V. SCENE 2.

955. talis uir: a man of your station (as compared with me, a slave).

956. Stalagmus disregards the irony of Hegio's words. fui: emphatic. bellus: fine, from **benelus*, diminutive of bonus; cf. bene.

frugi bonae: serving any good purpose; literally, for good use. See note on 269; in frugi bonae, the use of bonae shows that frugi was nevertheless sometimes felt as a dative.

957. ne spem ponas . . . fore: do not set any hopes on my ever being, etc. bonae frugi: instead of frugi bonae, as in the preceding line, to put greater emphasis on bonae.

958. propemodum ubi loci: about where; loci is a partitive genitive depending upon ubi.

959. tua ex re: a significant look or gesture would easily suggest the verb to be supplied; for this use of ex, see note on 338. facies . . . meliusculam: (sc. rem) you'll be making a bad matter a little better; literally, you'll be making (the matter), from a bad one, a little better.

960. If the text is correct, this line must be read with hiatus, rectē | adhuc.

961. quod ego fatear . . . autumes: what I myself would (readily) confess, would that shame me (think you ?) when you affirm it ? credin is parenthetical; autumes subjunctive probably because dependent upon another subjunctive, though it might be conceived of as a subjunctive of the indefinite second person (when any one says, as you have just done).

962. in ruborem te totum dabo: I'll set you to blushing all over; literally, I'll put you into a blush whole, i.e. I'll whip you till you are red all over. Dabo is from the dare that is connected with τιθημι, to put; see note on 124.

963. credo ego: notice the irony involved in the position of credo and ego, respectively. imperito: as though I weren't used to them; literally, as one inexperienced.

964. The metrical structure of this line is uncertain. See App. ista: i.e. those airs you are putting on. quid fers, etc.: i.e. what you want of me and what you propose to do with me, that you may get from me satisfaction for the evil I have done. For the mood of fers see note on 560.

965. iam fieri . . . compendi: to be cut short at once; literally, to be made (a matter) of saving (abridgment) at once. For iam in this sense, see on 251, 841.

966. bene morigerus: very compliant; an indelicate allusion is intended.

968. ex tuis rebus, etc.: you will have bettered your prospects somewhat; literally, from your (present) prospects you will have made somewhat better (prospects).

969. quid dignus: quid is felt as the object of some verb of suffering vaguely suggested by dignus; the full expression would be dignus ut patiar, or something similar (cf. Mil. 1140).

970. ea . . . pauca: a few of those (punishments); literally, those (punishments) in small numbers. potis es: equivalent to potes.

971. pauca: notice that pauci may mean either a few (contrasted with none at all), or few (contrasted with many). Hegio used pauca in the former sense, Stalagnus repeats it emphatically, but gives it the latter sense (yes, few indeed will be the punishments that I shall escape). et merito meo: and it will serve me right, too; literally, and in accordance with my desert.

975. Philocrati: for this form of the genitive, see note on 528. quin: see notes on 560, 589.

ACT V. SCENE 3.

978. quid me : uolo frequently takes two accusatives. gnatum meum : the position of these words would regularly be occupied by the subject of the infinitive instead of the object ; in the speaker's enthusiasm and excitement, gnatum forces its way to the front.

980. diu : for diu in the sense of "long ago," see note on 882. incipit uicensumus : literally, begins as the twentieth, incipere being here a neuter verb.

983. memoradum : in classical Latin this use of the enclitic -dum with an imperative is preserved only in agedum.

984. Paegnium : παίγνιον = plaything, pet. Tyndaro : i.e. ei nomen Tyndaro ; for the attraction of Tyndaro to the dative, see A. & G. 231. b. c ; B. 190. 1 ; G.-L. 349. R. 5 ; H. 430. 1.

986. nili sit faciunda : is to be regarded as of no account. The subjunctive is apparently due to the influence of the infinitive ; were it not for this, the quoniam-clause, having the force of an indicative si-clause, would take the indicative ; see Bennett, Appendix to Latin Grammar, § 401. 2.

987. istic : for the classical iste (see Introd. § 87 (c)). It is the antecedent of quem.

988. huius filius : Philocrates has just asked whether the boy sold by Stalagnus to Theodoromedes and the one given to himself when a boy were one and the same. Stalagnus answers this question with a nod, adding the further assurance huius filius.

989. is homo : the fact that Hegio here uses these words, instead of filius (gnatus) meus, seems to indicate that he still doubts whether the person in question was really his son ; however, he uses the same words in 337, in referring to his son. nil curavi : differs from non curavi, as "I cared naught for," "I cared nothing for," differ from "I did not care for." ceterum : substantive.

990. quin : see note on 560.

991. ut . . . argumenta loquitur : i.e. judging by the proofs he offers.

993. sum | et : it seems simpler to admit hiatus here than to emend the text arbitrarily. See App.

994. male . . . feci : I have misused.

995. eheu, quom : alas that, quom giving the reason for saying ehui ! plus minusue : i.e. more in the way of ill treatment, less in the way of kindness. me : subject of facere, understood. Possibly, however, it is ablative with aequom (after the analogy of the ablative with dignus); see Bacch. 488, me atque illo aequom foret; and cf. Mil. 619; Rud. 47.

996. quod male feci: the wrong I have done; quod is the relative. modo si: introducing a wish, exactly as "if only" may do in English; the usage must have originated in some such conditional sentence as "if it were only so, all would be well," from which the apodosis was suppressed, leaving merely "if it were only so!" possiet: the present tense (instead of the imperfect) is not uncommon in early Latin in unreal present conditions; see Intro. § 95 (a), 2.

997. eccum: see note on 169. ornatus: alluding to his chains and upupa. ex: in accordance with.

ACT V. SCENE 4.

998. quae . . . fierent: which were taking place, i.e. which were represented as taking place; the mood is due to the idea of indirect discourse suggested in picta, represented. Acherunti: locative; cf. ruri, Carthagini, Lacedaemoni, etc.

999. enim uero: see note on 534. Acheruns: commonly masculine, here feminine; cf. altae Acheruntis, quoted from an old poet, in Cic. Tusc. 1. 16. 37.

1000. atque: as, to be taken with adaequo. illic: for the classical ille. With illic ibi, cf. the vulgar English, that there (that 'ere).

1002. monerulae: the common form is monedulae; cf. arbitr, arfuerunt, for adbiter, adfuerunt.

1003. anites: for the usual anates (from anas). qui: see note on 28.

1004. haec: Tyndarus had the upupa in his hand. upupa: the name of a bird and also the name of a kind of hoe, or mattock; this twofold meaning offers to Tyndarus an opportunity to indulge in a grim jest, which may be reproduced by translating upupa by crow (crow-bar). qui: ablative (feminine) of means; see note on 28.

1005. eccum: cf. 997.

1006. quid 'gnate mi': why (do you say) "my son"? Gnatus is a less commonplace word than filius. For some reason, the vocative fili is never used in the dramatic poets; gnate is very common; see App.

1008. lucis . . . tuendi: of beholding the light of day; literally, of the beholding of the light (see note on 852); some editors, however, regard lucis as masculine and tuendi in agreement with it (cf. claro luci in Ter. Ad. 841). Tyndarus is contrasting daylight with the darkness of the stone quarries, from which (thanks to Hegio) he is now allowed to emerge (cf. 730).

1009. et tu : sc. salve. exigo : here apparently in the sense of endure.

1010. faxo : parenthetical and without influence upon the construction of the rest of the sentence. For the force of the future perfect (instead of the future), see notes on 194, 293, 341, 495.

1011. surpuit : for the form, see note on 760.

1014. illic : probably to be pronounced ille; see note on 751. The more remote demonstrative is here used to indicate a return to Stalagmus as subject (the is just used, had referred to the father of Philocrates) ; after the attention has thus been recalled to him, he is then referred to as hunc. But see App. reducimus : one might expect the perfect tense.

1015. quid huius filium : what of this man's son? At first thought, it may seem strange that Tyndarus receives the announcement that Hegio is his father with a question about Philopolemus, but it must be remembered that Tyndarus has been looking forward to and longing for the return of Philopolemus as the one thing that could rescue him from his suffering and restore him to freedom. Upon seeing Philocrates again before him, it is natural that his first thought should be whether Philopolemus had been brought back with him. As his attention is absorbed by this (to him) all-important question, the improbable announcement just made by Philocrates, that Hegio, the man who is responsible for his suffering, is his father, makes but little impression upon him. Even when Philocrates repeats his assertion, Tyndarus is still very indifferent about the matter ; indeed, at first he ignores the allusion to Hegio, and merely says (1019) that he will make trouble for the slave who stole him. quid huius : the h makes the preceding syllable long. Possibly, however, we should read hūius; see G.-L. 104. 2. eccum : see note on 169.

1016. aīs : treated in early Latin as āis, aīs, or āis.

1017. quin : see notes on 560, 589, 643, 856.

1018. tuos : used objectively.

1019. grandis : contrasted with paruom (1018). ad carnuficem : differs from carnufici, in calling attention merely to the idea of motion, while the dative with dabo would connote the "for-" idea as well as the "to-" idea.

1020. Imperfect in metrical structure. meritam mercedem : a desert (literally, reward) deserved.

1021. ēs (ess): for ēs, as regularly in Plautus and Terence.
gnate mi: see note on pater mi in 936. See App.

1022-1023: such repetitions, on the part of one who is trying to recall something almost forgotten, are common phenomena. See App.

1024. per nebulam: would be more appropriate with in memoriam regredior, but it is apparently felt as going with audisse; cf. Pseud. 463, quae quasi per nebulam scimus atque audiuius. The H of Hegio makes the preceding syllable long. uocarier: when used of personal experience, memini (to which in memoriam regredior is here equivalent) commonly takes the present infinitive instead of the perfect. G.-L. 281. 2; H. 618. 2.

1025. sit leuior: be relieved; literally, be lighter.

1026. principio: strengthening the idea of prae in praeuortier.

1027. faber: blacksmith.

1028. quoi . . . feceris: as much as to say, you may well speak of "giving" to one who is penniless; another attempt at a grim joke, in allusion to Hegio's proposal to "give" ("dem") him something. Feceris is future perfect indicative.

After the close of the play proper, it was customary for one member of the company to come forward, and, in the name of the company, ask the audience for plaudits of approval. In Terence, the speaker does this very briefly, with the words, ualete et plaudite, or simply plaudite; but in Plautus, his address is commonly, as in the present play, somewhat elaborate. It is possible that lines 1029-1036 were pronounced by the entire company in concert, instead of by a single actor.

1029. ad: with due regard to.

1031. pueri suppositio: as in the Truculentus, in which play Phronesium palms off upon Stratophanes a child, under the pretext that it is hers and that he is the father of it; cf. also a similar case in the Andria of Terence.

1032. neque ubi: nor (cases) where. clam: often a preposition in early Latin, but in Terence only with me and te. In classical times it was used only as an adverb.

1033. reperiunt: i.e. in the Greek plays which serve them as their models.

1034. ubi, etc.: whereby (i.e. through the influence of which), a colloquial use.

1035. neque odio fuimus: and have not bored you; literally, and have not been for annoyance (to you).

APPENDIX.

THIS Appendix is devoted chiefly to references, comments, or explanations that seem called for by statements made in my notes, or by readings adopted in my text. It has been taken for granted that users of this book who are especially interested in the constitution of the text will have access to all the standard editions, with their manuscript readings, critical notes, and appendixes.

ARGUMENTUM. 4. The various emendations of this line seem to me so uncertain that I have adopted none of them in the text. Possibly Plautus wrote captum after natum (Brugmann).

5. Editors commonly avoid the hiatus by writing in ibus for in ibi.

---

LINE 2. The most plausible emendation suggested for illi qui astant seems to me to be that of Speijer (Mnemosyne, XVI. p. 138), viz. non uili quia stant, but the reading is so uncertain that the best course seems to be to follow the Mss. See my note.

hi: editors commonly read i, but the manuscripts uniformly read hi, which (with Bach and Leo) I have retained. For parallel instances of ille and hic, both referring to the same person, see Capt. 1014, illic indicium fecit; nam hunc ex Alide huic reducimus; Mil. 22, periuriorum hoc hominem si quis uiderit, aut gloriarum pleniorum quam illic est; cf. Capt. 110-112, istos captiuos duos, heri quos emi de praeda de quaestoribus, his indito catenas, etc. (according to the manuscripts); ib. 733-734, abducite istum . . . iubete huic crassas compedes inpingier.

10. patri huiusce: this line has hitherto been considered corrupt and has been variously emended, but see my note, with references there given.

optimum est: Lindsay (The Journal of Philology, 52, p. 287) thinks that "absolute certainty is attached" to Leo's emendation, optume est. The latter certainly represents the regular usage in this sense, but under conditions similar to those in the text, we might in English say either "very well" or "very good," and it seems at least possible that optimum est was occasionally used in the sense of optume est.

11. See note.

39. For illic as a pronunciation of illic, see Skutsch, Studien zur Plautin. Prosodie, p. 113 ff.

53. On the force of the perfect subjunctive in expressions of contingent futurity, see Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, VI. There I have shown that the uoluerim in this line cannot be classed with such expressions. The perfect tense in such future uses of the subjunctive denotes energetic action promptly performed and promptly completed. Accordingly, no verb whose meaning is opposed to this idea is found with the perfect tense in this use. With uos quod monitos uoluerim in the sense of which I have wanted you advised of, cf. 309, hoc te monitum uolueram; Cist. 299, te uolo monitum. With this use of a past tense of uolo where uelim would make equally good (though entirely different) sense, cf. also 430, quo minus dixi quam uolui de te animum aduortas uolo.

72-73. The repetition of scortum in 73 has caused most editors to suspect a corruption in the text. The repetition is sufficiently accounted for by Ergasilus' evident desire to lay all possible emphasis upon the point that he is making. He is contending that, in spite of what the derisores say, it is perfectly appropriate that he should be called "Scortum"; for, he says, it is his scortum that the lover invokes, when he throws the dice—it is his scortum, I repeat; isn't a scortum then "inuocatum"? Why then object to my being called Scortum?

74. Scortum is inserted by Bentley after inuocatum. I have not incorporated it into the text, but I believe it to be correct, for the following reasons: (1) it is certain that a word has dropped out; (2) scortum has to be mentally supplied, in any case, to make sense, even if omitted from the text; (3) the preceding lines show that the speaker is making the most of this word by constant repetition and by centering the thought upon it; (4) the word would easily be omitted by a scribe, who, glancing up from his copy for a moment, after reading inuocatum would, upon turning again to his copy, mistake the -tum of scortum for the last syllable copied, and would begin writing again with an non, etc. The loss of (est? est), supplied by Camerarius, could not be so easily accounted for.

77-83. Karsten (Mnemosyne, XXI. p. 296 f.) regards 77-79 and rebus . . . miseri, in 82 and 83, as interpolations.

77. This line is commonly regarded as spurious (see, for instance, Spengel, Philologus 37, 421; Brix, ad loc.; Langen, Plautin. Studien, p. 271), but, it seems to me, without sufficient reason. Niemeyer defends it (Zeitschrift f. Gymnasialwesen for 1885, p. 361).

85-87. Rozwadowski (Wiener Studien, 13, p. 324), following Guyet, rejects these lines, but without sufficient reason. One is tempted to follow Speijer (Mnemosyne, XVI. p. 139) in retaining the canes, which the Mss. have at the end of 85, by letting it begin 86, canēs sumū(s) quādo, etc., and changing redierunt to rediere. But it seems equally plausible to suppose that canes crept into the Mss. from the margin, where some scribe had written it to make unmistakable the meaning of uenatici.

89. potest: see Leo, Plautin. Forsch. p. 72.

90. Editors commonly omit ire and read ilicet, needlessly altering the Mss. Instead of reading uēl ire ētra, Speijer (Mnemosyne, XVI. p. 139) suggests u'l ire ētra. See Skutsch, Iambenkürzung und Synizese, pp. 12-17.

94. This line is commonly considered corrupt, but see my note, with references. Karsten (Mnemosyne, XXI. pp. 296 f.) regards both 93 and 94 as interpolated. On the elision, before a following initial vowel, of a final syllable ending in s, see Leo, Plautin. Forsch. pp. 224 ff.

102-107. Langen regards these verses as spurious (Beiträge, p. 206; Plautin. Studien, p. 271).

102. A word must have fallen out from this verse, but it seems impossible to restore it with any degree of certainty.

104. nullast: Brix reads necullast; Leo, nam nulla est; but neither of these readings would have been likely to be corrupted into the reading of the Mss. (nulla est). Müller reads in inuentute; Ussing, iam inuentutis; others change the order of words. Possibly ipsi has fallen out after sese, the scribe having looked away from his copy after reading sese, and, upon returning, mistaken the -si of ipsi for the last syllable copied. The difference between i and e in capital Mss. is often almost indistinguishable. If ipsi originally stood in the text, inuentutis must have been read iūuentutis as in Most. 30, Ps. 202<sup>b</sup>, etc.

110. The colon is commonly placed after tu. As the caesura comes after sis, it seems more probable that tu is to be taken with what follows. Brix-Niemeyer suggests the possibility of this, but in the text retains the usual punctuation.

111. de: commonly changed to a by editors; cf. de quaestoribus in 34.

112. his: most editors change this to is (eis), but the reading of the Mss. seems correct; cf. 547-548, hic . . . istic; 733-734, istum . . . huic; 1014, illic . . . hunc (see note on hi in Prol. 2).

113. For the punctuation after istas, instead of after singularias, see Bach, Studemund's Studien, II. (1896) p. 322.

120-121. Karsten (Mnemosyne, XXI. p. 289) argues that a line must have dropped out between these lines.

121. Schrader conjectures men for mene and ipsus for ipse; see Dissertationes Argentoratenses, VII. p. 263. On the supposed use of -ne in the sense of nonne, see Morris in Am. Jour. of Phil., XI. pp. 19 ff.

136-137. Regarded as interpolations by Karsten (Mnemosyne, XXI. p. 298 ff.).

139. For the justification of the statement made in my notes, to the effect that there is no such thing in Latin as a negative question of deliberation, see The Latin Prohibitive (Am. Jour. of Phil., XV. pp. 313 ff.); also Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, VI. pp. 213 ff.

151. For quom (cum) in the sense of the fact that, see, e.g., Hale, The Cum-Constructions, pp. 79 and 242.

152. For the use of the subjunctive in expressions of obligation or propriety, see The Latin Prohibitive (Am. Jour. of Phil., XV. p. 313), and Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, VI. p. 213. For a different view, see Bennett, Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, IX. pp. 1-20.

152-167. Er. Eheu . . . bonum animum. These verses are regarded by Karsten as interpolations. For éhēu hūic, see note on 148, with references there given.

157. quod optigerat: the editors who retain this line at all, follow Camerarius in changing quod to quoi; but see my note. The reading of the Mss. seems as likely to be right as any one of the numerous conjectures.

169. Intus is commonly added before Aleum, on metrical grounds, but unnecessarily. See my note and Birt (Rhein. Mus. for 1899, p. 61).

172. For the force of the perfect tense in prayers, etc., see my Studies in Latin Moods and Tenses (Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, VI.). For an opposing view, see Bennett, Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, IX., and for an answer to this critique, see American Journal of Philology, XXI. (1900).

175. I follow Leo in retaining the reading of the Mss. te uocari. The usual emendation (a te uocari) misses the wit of Ergasilus' words, referred to in the next line, and is less in harmony with num uocatus es? in 173. See note.

179-181. See Karsten (Mnemosyne, XXI. p. 303).

193. apud: Leo (Plautin. Forsch. pp. 226 ff.) argues that the d in apud was silent in cases like this.

trapessitam: this is probably the correct form for Plautus; see my note. Harrington (Proceedings of the American Philological Association for 1898, p. xxxiv.) argues that there was no letter z, even in the earliest Latin alphabet. See Hempl's article on The Origin of the Latin Letters G and Z in Transactions of the Am. Phil. Ass., XXX. p. 24.

194. iuero: Meifart (de fut. exarti usu Plaut.) shows that this use of the future perfect, where one might expect the future, is found chiefly at the end of a line or in diaeresis, and that the choice of this tense is frequently determined by metrical convenience. It must not, however, be supposed that no difference was felt between the future perfect and the future. Very often the energetic and the calm forms of expression (e.g. "I'll be off" and "I'll go") are equally appropriate in the context. In such cases, metrical convenience may determine the choice, but the difference between the tenses nevertheless remains clear and distinct. See note.

199. Niemeyer (Plautin. Studien, pp. 6 ff.) favors the reading et erili imperio eamque ingeniis, etc. See Nettleship, Lectures and Essays, p. 343; Karsten in Mnemosyne, XXI. p. 304. The reading of the Mss., however, may be correct after all (see my note).

201. Speijer (Mnemosyne, XVI. p. 141) suggests Éiulátíone múlta óculis múlta méra ciétur. I have not been able to see what Schebor says of this passage in the Journal des Kais. russ. Ministeriums der Volksaufklärung, Sept. 1891, pp. 57-84; Oct. pp. 1-7.

211. For another view regarding the etymology of arbiter, see Fay in Vinson's Revue de linguistique, 1898, pp. 373 ff.

217. The insertion of atque before ea seems the best of the various emendations of this line.

243. esse nunc: nunc is commonly dropped by editors; but see my note.

244. quom: perhaps Plautus wrote quoi. See Speijer in Mnemosyne, XVI. p. 144.

246. perque: for the pronunciation perq see Skutsch, Studien, p. 152. Lindsay apparently rejects the possibility of the scansion quód hóstica (Journal of Philology, 22. p. 4).

250. It is quite possible that we should, with Speijer (Mnemosyne, XVI. p. 140), read 'n hác, instead of in hác.

258. The impression, sometimes given by grammars, that causal qui-clauses require the subjunctive, is a mistaken one. Such a clause may take either the subjunctive or the indicative. The difference between the moods seems to be that the subjunctive lays particular stress upon the causal relation, while the indicative merely states the fact, and leaves the logical bearing of the clause to take care of itself. See Hale, Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, I. pp. 97, 104, 118, 138.

265. nescibo: there is some doubt about the reading. Delaruelle (Revue de Philologie, 18. p. 265) argues for quod nesciumst.

268. On the appending of ne to interrogative words, see Proceedings of the American Philological Association for 1892, p. xviii.

274. Nettleship (Lectures and Essays, p. 343) suggests Euge! prae tali Thaletem non emam Milesium.

280. This line is considered corrupt. It is barely possible that the usual Ālēis may here be Ālēis (cf. Āpūlo and Āpūliae in Hor. Od. 3. 4; Ītalus and Ītalus), or that we should read Ālēis.

286. quasi: it has been supposed that quasi must be taken with propter diuitias, but I can not see that it yields satisfactory sense when so understood. Furthermore, the position of quasi is a serious objection to such an interpretation. The explanation given in my note seems to me satisfactory, and the only one not open to objections.

290. Considered corrupt by some scholars, on account of the indefinite use of quando. See Scherer, Studemund's Studien, II. pp. 107 f. and 129.

304. On the probable pronunciation of nempe and quippe mentioned in my note, see Skutsch, Forschungen zur lat. Grammatik und Metrik, pp. 30, 93.

305. *fuera*m: it is customary to say that the pluperfect in such cases is equivalent to the perfect or imperfect. Delbrück very properly dissents from such views, Vergleichende Syntax der Indog. Sprachen, Zweiter Theil, pp. 318 ff.); cf. Blase, Geschichte des Plusquamperfectum, pp. 9 ff., and my note on dixeras in Ter. Phorm. 613.

306. alterius: this is commonly changed to altrius, but see my note.

309. uolueram: Brix conjectured uoluerim for the uolueram of the Mss., but this conjecture is based upon a wrong conception of the force of the perfect subjunctive. This use of the perfect subjunctive of a verb belonging to the same class as uolo is impossible for either early or classical Latin. See note on quod . . . uoluerim in 53, and Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, VI. p. 173.

345. Skutsch (Hermes, 32, p. 92) suggests optime for omne.

346. The expression "predicating characterizing," found in my notes, is adopted from Hale.

352. Mähly (Zeitschrift f. d. Oesterreichischen Gymnasien, 38. p. 588) suggests hic celere eat for hoc cedere ad.

359. This line has heretofore been supposed to be corrupt. The supposed metrical difficulty is commonly obviated by writing monstra for demonstra; Lindsay retains demonstra, but writes doce for dice. The line is probably correct as it stands; see my note and cf. Skutsch's "Ausblick," on pp. 147 ff. of his Forschungen.

387. See note.

392. Langen (Plautin. Studien, p. 274) would reject this line on the ground that semper fecit is absurd, coming from a prisoner captured only the day before (cf. 110 ff.), and that such expressions as are here found would not be used by a slave.

394. nam quidem: is commonly changed to nam equidem, on the ground that in the eight other passages where the phrase occurs it takes the latter form. In Ps. 260, however, C. has quidem, and all the Mss. have quidem in the present passage. There seems no sufficient ground for changing this reading.

395. Müller (Rhein. Mus. LIV. p. 385) suggests mihi cum hoc {nunc}.

401. me hic ualere: see Langen, Plautin. Studien, p. 274; Speijer, Mnemosyne, XVI. p. 145. Nencini (Studi Italiani di Filologia Classica, 3. p. 84) suggests ut alibi et tu tē for valere et tute.

403. me aduorsatum tibi: I see no sufficient reason for changing this reading of the Mss. It is in perfect harmony with (uos) inter nos fuisse ingenio haud discordabili in 402. Tyndarus is dwelling upon the mutual relations of good-will existing between them, and neque me aduorsatum tibi is needed to carry out this idea after the preceding neque te commeruisse culpam.

417. meus esses: commonly considered corrupt, but see my note.

418. The reading of the Mss. is commonly altered, but see my note.

420. uideas: for arguments in favor of the view that the subjunctive never has the power of expressing ability, and that this must not, therefore, be translated by can see, see Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, VI. p. 198. For a counter argument, see Bennett, ib. IX. p. 41.

430. quo minus: one is strongly tempted to write quom minus.

430-445. Karsten (Mnemosyne, XXI. p. 306) regards these lines as an interpolation.

431. caueto: editors are wont to follow Bentley in changing to caue tu. Nettleship (Lectures and Essays, p. 343) suggests caũto (see Serv. on Aen. IV. 409). It is barely possible, however, that the second syllable of a word of three or more syllables may be shortened, even when it is long by nature (see Introd. § 84, 4). At any rate, such phenomena are so frequently presented by Mss. that one cannot lightly dismiss them as not worth considering. See the readings of the Mss. in Aul. 482, mĩnõre; 599, hẽrĩle; Epid. 338, quĩrto; Merc. 841, est cĩpĩta; Pseud. 498, ãmõris; Stich. 700, ãmĩca, etc. Esch (De Plauti correptione secundae syllabae vocabulorum polysyllaborum, quae mensura iambica incipiunt) gives twenty-three such instances of shortening in Plautus, in trisyllabic words alone (though a few of these instances do not properly belong in his list), and many similar instances in longer words. When the second syllable is long by position, a similar shortening is very common. Esch gives seventy-seven such instances in trisyllabic words in Plautus, and many others in longer words. Under these circumstances, I have allowed the reading of the Mss. to stand, though not without misgivings. See Skutsch, Iambenkürzung und Synizese, p. 12; Studien zur Plaut. Prosodie, p. 108; Leo, Plautin. Forsch. p. 292.

432. tẽ mẽa fĩdẽ mĩtti: the te is commonly discarded but, in my judgment, without sufficient reason.

435. te hic: commonly written ted hic to avoid the supposed hiatus, but the reading of the Mss. may be correct. See my note.

444. This verse has been variously emended, but is probably correct as it stands. See note.

458. modo captiuos: Müller (Rhein. Mus. LIV. p. 385) regards Fleckeisen's modo (ad) captiuos as "absolut sicher"; cf. 126.

466. On the elision of s before a following initial vowel in Plautus, see Leo, Plautin. Forsch. pp. 224 ff. For another possible explanation, see Spengel in Philologus, XXXVII. p. 436. Editors have commonly altered the reading of the Mss. here to nec magis, to make it conform to supposed metrical requirements. Similar changes have been made in numerous other cases of similar character. Leo now shows that the Mss. are probably right after all.

471. unisubsellĩ: frequently changed to ĩmi subsellĩ, but even if this made the interpretation easier, the evidence in favor of the reading of the Mss., supported, as it is, by the Mss. in Stich. 488, is so strong that such an arbitrary alteration seems unjustified.

479. Editors commonly abandon the Mss. on account of the supposed violation of metrical requirements; but see note on mag(is) ecfertum in 466, and Leo's Plautin. Forsch. p. 251.

518. Regarded by Karsten as an interpolation.

519. On the anticipatory subjunctive, see Hale's The Anticipatory Subjunctive in Greek and Latin (Univ. of Chicago Studies in Classical Philology, I.).

521. Regarded by Karsten as an interpolation.

524. operta . . . aperta sunt: Karsten regards these words as an interpolation.

527. uenit modo | intro: with our imperfect knowledge of the restrictions of hiatus, it is as well to allow it at this unusual place in the verse as to alter the reading of the Mss. Additional doubt, however, is caused by the anapaest in the seventh foot.

532. ineptias incipisse: Leo (Plautin. Forsch. pp. 224 ff.) shows that final s is much more frequently disregarded in Plautine verse than has been supposed. After a short vowel, it may not only be disregarded before an initial consonant of a following word, but it is often elided also before an initial vowel (see App. 466), as m continued to be in classical times. In lines like the present one (Leo cites numerous others, p. 297 f.), it may be that s was similarly elided, though preceded by a long vowel (just as m was elided, without regard to the length of the preceding vowel). Leo, however, excludes such an hypothesis as inadmissible. Possibly we should read īnēp|tīās īn|cipisse.

536. I have followed Leo in letting mihi begin this verse. In the Mss. it ends the preceding line, where it cannot possibly stand.

541. See App. 152. There can be no doubt that the subjunctive is frequently used in Latin to express the idea of obligation or propriety, where the only correct translation is made by the use of should, ought to, or some equivalent expression; see Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, VI. Part III.

547. It is not necessary to make any emendation here. See note. To change hic to istic destroys the alliteration, which seems intentional.

550. sputatur: it seems to me that editors have changed this to insputarier without sufficient reason. We know next to nothing about the usage of either of these words, and in the face of such ignorance it is wiser to let the reading of the Mss. stand. The fact that sputo occurs once in Plautus and once in Ovid in an active form is hardly sufficient evidence for rejecting sputatur here as a collateral deponent form. Verbs which are found in both active and deponent forms, even in the same author, are common; see, for instance, dictionaries under proficiscor, proficisco; amplexor, amplexo; sortior, sortio; comitor, comito; and many others (see Introd. § 89). The interpretation in my notes was suggested by Fay (Classical Review for 1894, p. 391), who, however, accepts insputatur as a probable correction. He extends his interpretation to insputarier and insputari in 553 and 555. In this he may be correct, but his objection to the transitive use of insputo, though serious, is not insurmountable. Other similar compounds are found with the accusative, e.g. inclamo, inuoco (literally, to call upon or at).

558. Commonly considered corrupt, but see my note. Leo retains ego, but indicates an impossible scansion.

597. The Mss. read atra pix. Havet (Revue de Philologie, 18. p. 242) argues for atra agitet pix.

653. This line is commonly considered corrupt, but see my note. On the use of -ne in the sense of uero, indeed, see Warren, Am. Jour. of Phil. II. pp. 50 ff.

694. Apparently corrupt. The line can be read metrically as it stands only by scanning intĕrdĭco, which seems impossible.

699. This line may have originally ended in redux, the bene est then belonging to the beginning of the next line; see Speijer in Mnemosyne (1888), p. 152, and cf. 686, 923, and Prol. 43.

749. The reading of the Mss. is retained. See my note.

771. For other instances of pompa, see Knapp, Classical Review, X. p. 427.

791. For the proof that the Romans felt a distinct and important difference between the perfect and present tenses in expressions referring to the future, see Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, VI.

800-802. See Karsten (l.c.).

818-822. Regarded by Karsten as an interpolation.

819. Editors commonly read dupla instead of duplam, and interpret the line as meaning who have lambs killed and then offer lamb for sale at double the price (i.e. at double the price it is really worth).

This interpretation is open to the following objections:—

(1) Lanii means butchers, i.e. those who with their own hands slaughter animals; but the interpretation in question makes it necessary to suppose that the butchers employed some one else to do their butchering.

(2) The positions of locant and danunt clearly show that these two words are strongly contrasted. The interpretation in question disregards this contrast altogether.

(3) There is no authority of any kind for the reading dupla. The manuscript authority is unanimously in favor of duplam, and such authority ought always to be respected until it has been clearly proved to be impossible. Furthermore, the presence of duplam in the Mss. would be difficult to account for, if we suppose that dupla was originally written, as duplam is the difficilior lectio; it would never have occurred to a scribe to write duplam agninam, double lamb, if he had found dupla in his Ms., since dupla and duplum were used of price commonly enough to have occasioned no difficulty.

(4) Finally, the parasite is complaining about the quality of things, not about the price; note, for instance, foetidos (813), petroni (820). The price of food never worries a parasite.

The interpretation offered in my notes avoids all of these difficulties. Agnos is the object of locant, just as statuam is, in locant statuam faciendam; the only difference is that the lambs are contracted for as fit to be slaughtered; the statue as one to be made. In neither case does locant imply that anything already in one's possession is to be handed over to some one else; it implies, in either case, merely a contract for something not yet in one's possession. The locator, as Hallidie says, may be either the party who pays, or the party who is paid, according to the nature of the contract. In the present passage the lanii are the parties to be paid (by the public, with the understanding that the lamb is to be young and tender). For another instance of caedundus in the sense of fit to be killed, fat, see Aul. 567.

828. Kellerhoff, de collocatione verborum Plautina (Studemund's Studien, II. p. 80), conjectures alter before fortunator; see my note.

830. Bothe's conjecture of hic est ? ecquis after ecquis is commonly adopted, but it seems to me too uncertain to justify incorporating it into the text.

836. Abraham (Studia Plautina, Jahrbuecher für Class. Phil. for 1885, p. 202) holds that in tempore is not Plautine Latin.

840. The Mss. end this line with noli irascier, which both destroys the metre and is inappropriate. Probably these words have crept in from 845, displacing what originally stood here.

842. For comments upon the use of quod in passages similar to this, see Fay, Am. Jour. Phil. XVIII. p. 179.

847. laridum atque epulas: on this use of atque, see my dissertation on The Copulative Conjunctions Que, Et, Atque, in the Inscriptions of the Republic, in Terence, and in Cato, p. 31.

856. faciam ut te: editors commonly adopt Bentley's conjecture, tute for te. Probably, however, the reading of the Mss. is correct. See Appendix to my edition of Ter. Phorm. p. 156.

865. deum : I retain the reading of the Mss. See my note.

882. iam diu : Gray (Proceedings of the Cambridge Phil. Soc. for 1888, p. 6) revives Wagner's emendation, tam modo.

892. Brix-Niemeyer takes etiam with quom in the sense of even when. Kirk (Am. Jour. of Phil. XVIII. p. 26) takes it in the sense of still. But its position favors my interpretation. If Plautus did not intend etiam to be taken with sancte, he would be guilty of unnecessary ambiguity in assigning it to this position in the sentence.

901. I have followed the Mss. in making a new scene here, though editors commonly follow Spengel (Scenentitel, pp. 278 ff.) in recognizing no division.

923. reducem : on the derivation and form of this word, see Fleckeisen, Neue Jahrbücher for 1893, p. 196 f. and for 1895, p. 277 f. In the present passage it is customary to write redducem, but this is against all manuscript authority, and against the uniform usage of all poets from Naevius on, including Plautus himself (cf., in the present play, 437, 686, 931 ; also Prol. 43). In Rud. 909 there is similarly no authority for redducem, though editors adopt this reading. The simplest way to remedy the metre is to assume, with Fleckeisen, that te belongs after tuo.

927. haec . . . repertast : probably rē has fallen out before the rē of repertast.

964. Perhaps Plautus wrote istaec (Schmidt) instead of ista ; or ac dic (Camerarius) instead of dic.

993. Vos is commonly inserted, quite arbitrarily, after si.

1006. On the use of gnatus and filius, see Köhm, quaestiones Plautinae Terentianaeque, pp. 6 ff.

1014. For illic, Bach conjectures ipse (Studemund's Studien, II. pp. 343 ff.), but see my note.

1021. Havet inserts tu after sed. Perhaps vero was originally written after oro. See Speijer, Mnemosyne, XVI. p. 155.

1022-1023. One of these lines is commonly rejected, but, it seems to me, without adequate reason. See my note.

INDEX TO NOTES.

absque esset, 754.

accusative with substantives in -tio, 519.

ad = apud, 49, 275, 699.

adeo, 348, 519.

aeque, adaeque, with comparative,
700, 828.

Aesculapius, 655.

aihat, 561.

ain tu, 892.

Alidem = in Alidem, 573.

alt(e)rum, alt(e)rius, 8, 306.

ambulato, 452, 900.

amittere, 7, 36, 332, 460.

an, 257.

aps, 790.

apud, 193, 312.

arbiter, 210.

arbitror, 219.

aspirates, 88, 274, 850.

ast, 683.

at, 563, 596, 664.

audere, 238.

audiōis, 247, 265, 619.

autem, 556.

barbaricos, 492, 884.

bellus, 956.

bene merenti, 935.

bitere, 380.

boia, 888.

can-subjunctive, 531.

causa, 431.

cedo, 838.

certumst, 215 a, 492, 732.

characterizing clauses, 12, 103.

clam, 1032.

collus, 357.

commands in present subjunctive, 340.

conciliare, 33, 131.

consimilis, 116.

crux, 469.

danunt, 819.

dare = put, 124, 962.

dative of agent, 52, 215 a.

dicam ut, 920.

diirectum, 636.

Diespiter, 909.

dignus, 751.

diu = long ago, 882, 980.

dixti, 155.

donicum, 339.

-dum, 570.

-ē, in ablative.

ec for ex, 457, 466.

eccum, 169, 997.

ecferat, 457.

ego, 289, 295, 414.

em, 183, 373.

emittere manu, 408, 713.

enim, 22, 534, 568.

ergo, 350.

etiam, 218, 556.

exemplis, 691.

exitium, exitio, 519.

- fabula*, 52.
fac sis, 439.
faxis, 124, 149, 695.
fazo, 124, 149.
foculis, 847.
foris, foras, 114, 137.
frugi, 269, 956.
fuas, 431.
fueram, 305.
fuimus, 243, 516, 575. future perfect, 194, 293; 341, 495.

genius, 290, 879.
 gerund with genitive, 852, 1008.
gnatus, 19, 130, 711, 881.
gratiis, 106.

hem, 183, 373.
hereditas, 775.
hoc = huc, 329, 480.
hoc age, 444, 930.
hodie, 348.

-i, genitive of nouns in- es, 528.
iam, 164, 251.
ibus, 5.
id suscenses, 680.
i directum, 636.
-ier, 13.
igitur, 871.
ilicet, 90.
illi, 341.
immo, 209, 857.
 imperative, future, 11, 112, 401.
indaudiuit, 30.
inde, 77, 128, 304.
 indicative in O. O.
 indicative question of deliberation, 353, 479, 581.
 indicative question, indirect, 206 b, 207 b.

 infinitive of exclamation, 946.
 inner object, 16, 32, 127.
insputarier, 550.
interdius, 730.
ipsus, 7.

lauate, 953.
legio, 451.
licet, with subjunctive, 303.
longum est, 61, 68.

m not elided, 372, 373.
med, 240, 405, 553.
memini, 240, 303, 1024.
mi, 936.
modo, 839.
moriri, 732.

-ne, 121, 188, 304, 653, 857.
ne with present subjunctive, 331, 349, 393.
neque = neue, 437.
nescibo, 265.
nescioquem, 837.
ne utiquam, 586.
nil, accusative of result produced, 16.
nisi quod, 394, 621, 916.
non, nonne, 139, 564.
nullum, substantive, 154, 764.
numquid aliud uis, 191, 448.
nunciam, 218.
nuperum, 718.

occepit, 467.
odos, 815.
operam dare, 6.
optumi, 10, 68.
opus est with ablative of participle, 225.
-or, 530.

- p* (ph), Personae, 274.
pauca, 971.
 perfect in prayers, 172, 320.
 pluperfect, 17, 194, 305.
potior with genitive, 92, 144.
potis, 89, 171.
praetor, 450, 505.
prandium, 479.
 present for future, 331, 445, 683.
 present for future perfect, 593.
 present participle = perfect, 9, 914.
 present subjunctive in commands, 340.
 prohibitives, 186, 331, 393.
quaenam, 799.
quasi, 181, 286, 417.
quemque = quemcumque, 797.
 questions, 139, 206 b, 208, 353, 531, 560, 592, 964.
qui, ablative, 28, 243.
qui, causal, 538.
qui = quis, 206 b, 560, 833.
quia, 153, 203.
quin, 353, 560, 589, 592, 643, 856.
quod, ablative, 842.
quod sciam, 173, 265.
quod tu, 270.
quom, 51.
quom = quod, 151.
quom with indicative, 146, 151, 214, 216, 244, 277, 280, 420.
recens, 718.
reconciliare, 33, 131.
reddo, with participle, 345.
 relative clauses in O. O., 567, 720.
roga emptum, 179.
 Roman allusions, 34, 335.
s, Argumentum 1; 94, 466, 532 (App.), 691.
sacrum, 617.
Samiis uasis, 291.
seruibas, 247.
si, 28.
similis, 116, 582.
sine sacris, 775.
siquidem, 920.
sis, sultis, 110, 456, 667.
subbasilicanos, 815.
suo sibi, 5, 46, 81.
syngraphum, 450.
 tenses in prayers, 172, 622, 868.
trapesitam, 193, 449.
tu, 289.
tum igitur, 857.
u for y, 450.
u for i, 10, 11, 67, 74, 99, 222.
u, parasitic, 562, 655.
uerba dare, 472, 651, 787, 945.
uerum, 269, 607.
uicem, 526.
uicti, genitive, 855.
uideas, 420.
uidelicet, 286.
uiden, 304.
uinclum, 254.
uirtus, 324, 410.
uisne ? uocem ? 121, 360.
ultro, 551.
unisubseli, 471.
uo for uu, 8, 81.
uolueram, 53, 309.
uostram fidem, 418.
ut, 165, 276, 424, 486.
ut qui, 28, 243, 553, 738, 828.
utrum, 268.
y, 450.
z, 193.

The Latin Language

A Historical Outline of its Sounds, Inflections, and Syntax, by CHARLES E. BENNETT, Goldwin Smith Professor of Latin in Cornell University. 12mo, cloth, 272 pages. Price, $1.00.

THIS is a text-book in advanced Latin Grammar for colleges and universities. It is a complete revision of the Appendix to Bennett's Latin Grammar, a book which was first prepared in 1896, from a series of lectures to advanced students on subjects not covered by any Latin Grammar published in America. The title, Appendix, was found to be misleading, and the author has given to the revision the new name of The Latin Language. The book gives such information regarding the history and development of the language as experience has shown to be of service to students who are specializing in Latin.

The subjects treated are: The Latin Alphabet, Accent, Inflections, Pronunciation, Orthography, Adverbs and Prepositions, Hidden Quantity, The Latin Sounds, and Syntax.

Syntax of Early Latin

By Professor CHARLES E. BENNETT, of Cornell University.

Vol. I: The Verb. 8vo, cloth, 525 pages. Price, $4.00.

Vol. II: The Case Constructions. 8vo, cloth, 419 pages. Price, $4.00.

THIS book is intended to replace the now long antiquated manual of Holtze, Syntaxis Priscorum Scriptorum Latinarum, Leipsic, 1861-62. Since that work was published our texts of all the Early Latin writers have been put upon a new foundation; new principles and standards have been set up in syntactical investigation; and scores of important monographs have appeared on the syntax of special authors and of special usages. The author's aim has been to incorporate in his work the results of all these labors. The book, while dealing primarily with the syntax of Early Latin, is of fundamental importance to every earnest student of the syntax of the later classical period, since Early Latin so often reveals the germ from which the classical idiom has developed.

COLLEGE LATIN SERIES

Livy: Books I, XXI, and XXII

Edited by J. H. WESTCOTT, Musgrave Professor of Latin in Princeton University. Introduction, Notes, and Maps. Revised Edition, 12mo, cloth, 463 pages. Price, $1.25. Text Edition, 213 pages. Price, 25 cents.

THE Introduction discusses Roman History before Livy, The Early Annalists, and anti-Annalistic Writers; Livy's Life, Style, Character, and Influence on Literature; Diction and Grammar; Manuscripts and Editions.

The selection of the three books contained in this volume is not merely sanctioned by long usage, but rests upon good reason. Book I forms a unit by itself, a "prose epic," dealing with the mythical age of the Roman kings, while Books XXI and XXII not only exhibit the author's style in its mature perfection, but also deal with the most thrilling and momentous crisis of the Roman republic.

In the text each chapter is preceded by a brief argument in English. There are six full-page maps and a Bibliography.

In this revision the editor, while aiming to preserve the original character of the book, has availed himself of the results of research in the study of Livy during the last fifteen years.

Selected Letters of Pliny

With an Introduction and Notes by J. H. WESTCOTT, Musgrave Professor of Latin in Princeton University. 12mo, cloth, 326 pages. Price, $1.25. Text edition, 129 pages. Price, 25 cents.

THE Introduction contains a detailed Life of Pliny and sections on Inscriptions relating to Pliny; Pliny's Style; Manuscripts and Editions of Pliny's Letters.

In the text the content of each letter is suggested by a line of English. The notes are full, and contain small maps showing the places mentioned in the text. There is also a large plan of Pliny's Laurentine villa. The book contains an Appendix on the Chronology of the Letters, and a Critical Appendix.

---

COLLEGE LATIN SERIES — Continued

---

Complete Works of Horace

---

Edited by Professors BENNETT and ROLFE. Printed on Bible paper and bound in flexible covers. 12mo, cloth, 922 pages. Price, $2.00.

IN this volume each poem is preceded by a careful analysis, giving in a line or two all necessary information regarding the subject, date, and metre.

The comprehensive Introduction to the Odes and Epodes has sections devoted to Horace's Life and Works; Manuscripts, Scholia, and Editions; Classification of the Odes and Epodes; Language (treating the poet's most striking deviations from standard prose usage); The Metres, with rules for reading.

The Introduction to the Satires and Epistles is equally exhaustive, and treats of the Life and Works of Horace; The Development of the Roman Satire; The Dramatic and Literary Satire; The Schools of Ennius and Lucilius; General Characteristics of the Satires; The Style of the Satires (taking up the needed points of Syntax); Colloquial Language of the Satires; The Metres.

The commentary is eminently judicious, telling the student all he needs to know, but never more than he will understand and appreciate.

This one-volume edition, printed on Bible paper and bound in flexible covers, is the most attractive and convenient edition of the complete works of Horace.

Odes and Epodes of Horace

---

Edited by CHARLES E. BENNETT, Goldwin Smith Professor of Latin in Cornell University. 12mo, cloth, 464 pages. Price, $1.40. Text edition, 192 pages. Price, 25 cents.

Satires and Epistles of Horace

---

Edited by JOHN C. ROLFE, Professor of Latin in the University of Pennsylvania. 12mo, cloth, 458 pages. Price, $1.40. Text edition, 163 pages. Price, 25 cents.

---

COLLEGE LATIN SERIES — Continued

---

The Agricola and Germania of Tacitus

---

With Maps, Introduction, and Notes by Professor ALFRED GUDEMAN. 12mo, cloth, 366 pages. Price, $1.40.

THE Introduction to the Agricola covers : The Life and Writings of Tacitus ; The Literary Character and Purpose of the Agricola ; The Style and Rhetoric of Tacitus. That of the Germania has sections on The Purpose, The Sources, and The Trustworthiness of the Germania.

The text is broken at intervals by the insertion of a line of English which indicates the course of the narrative.

The Agricola contains a map of the British Isles, and the Germania one of Europe with both ancient and modern names.

The Agricola of Tacitus

---

With an Introduction and Notes by Professor ALFRED GUDEMAN. 12mo, cloth, 198 pages. Price, $1.00.

The Dialogus of Tacitus

---

With an Introduction and Notes by Professor ALFRED GUDEMAN. 12mo, cloth, 201 pages. Price, $1.00.

THE Introduction treats of the Question of Authorship of the Dialogus ; The Dramatic Structure ; The Interlocutors ; The Literary Sources. The text is broken at intervals by a line of English for the guidance of the reader.

Selections from Suetonius

---

Introduction and Notes by JOSEPH B. PIKE, Professor of Latin in the University of Minnesota. 12mo, cloth, 340 pages. Price, $1.25.

THIS edition contains the Lives of Tiberius, Caligula, Claudius, and Nero. The Introduction devotes space to the Life of Suetonius ; His Language, Style, and Works ; Manuscripts and Editions of Suetonius. In the text are marginal notes in English intended to help the pupil to follow the narrative.

---

COLLEGE LATIN SERIES — Continued

---

Tusculan Disputations: Books I, II, V

With Introduction and Notes by Professor H. C. NUTTING, of the University of California. 12mo, cloth, 358 pages. Price $1.50.

THIS edition is well equipped with an introduction containing a brief discussion of Cicero's philosophical works and his relation to Greek philosophy; with synopses, giving a fairly full outline of the arguments and of the connection of thought of the text; with ample notes; and complete indices. The Tusculan Disputations have always been considered admirably adapted to college work and it is hoped that this excellent edition will extend their use.

The Mostellaria of Plautus

With Introduction and Notes by Professor EDWIN W. FAY, of the University of Texas. 12mo, cloth, 204 pages. Price, $1.00.

PROFESSOR FAY'S Introduction has sections on Plautus, the Man and the Writer; The Versification of the Mostellaria, with a classification of the metres and reference to all the lines where each occurs; and The Dialect of Plautus.

In the text the stage directions are inserted in English.

The notes are full of parallels from Elizabethan drama. They are also distinguished by the racy rendering of the idiomatic Latin. Synopses precede the comment on each scene.

The Andria of Terence

With Introduction and Notes by Professor HENRY R. FAIRCLOUGH, of Leland Stanford Junior University. 12mo, cloth, 266 pages. Price, $1.25.

AS the Andria is often the first Latin comedy to be read, the editor has made his Introduction exceptionally full. It contains sections on The Development of Roman Comedy; The Literary Awakening of Rome; The Plot and Characters of the Andria; The Theatre; Prosody; Metres and Music; The Language; and kindred matters.

COLLEGE LATIN SERIES — Continued

The Captivi of Plautus

With Introduction and Notes by Professor H. C. ELMER, of Cornell University. 12mo, cloth, 231 pages. Price, $1.25.

PROFESSOR ELMER'S Introduction covers a Sketch of the History of Greek and Roman Comedy; The History of the Text of Plautus; Dramatic Entertainments — the Actor's Stage, etc.; The Division of the Plays into Acts and Scenes; The Metres of Plautus and their Appropriateness to Different Moods; Differences in the Manner of rendering Rhythms; Prosody; Language; Plot of the Captivi.

In the text each scene is preceded by an English synopsis. The stage directions are given in English.

The notes are full enough for beginners in Latin comedy.

Roman Constitutional History

By Professor J. E. GRANRUD, of the University of Minnesota. 12mo, cloth, 306 pages. Price, $1.25.

THE political institutions of Rome are treated historically so as to furnish collateral reading for students of Latin, and provide an admirable introduction to further study of the subject.

The book is divided into four periods: I. The Formation of the Roman State (753-509 B.C.), showing the Composition of the Roman Population and the Early Government; II. The Equalization of the Orders (509-287), with chapters on the Organization of the Plebeians, the Consular Tribunes and Censors, the Claudian Reforms and the Hortensian Laws; III. The Supremacy of the Senate (287-133); IV. The Overthrow of the Republic and the Establishment of a New Monarchy (133-44), with chapters on the Revolution of the Gracchi, the Constitution of Sulla, the First Triumvirate, and the Rule of Cæsar.

For those unfamiliar with Latin, technical terms have been translated.

CINCINNATI BIBLE COLLEGE & SEM. LIBRARY
878 P721t
Plautus, Titus Macc/T. Macci Plavti Capt

3 4320 00039 0072

878 P721t

Plautus, Titus Maccius.

T. Macci Plavti Captivi

GEORGE MARK ELLIOTT LIBRARY
The Cincinnati Bible Seminary

878 P721t

Plautus, Titus Maccius.

T. Macci Plavti Captivi

